No need for sitting now. Ethel put an arm around her as the minister intoned the heartbreaking sermon. She had insisted that this be an only religious ceremony. The coffin was lowered, and Ethel threw the first roughoor....the first clods of muddy earth thudded on its protecting surface.

Hours later, it seemed, she was back at the door of the four-story apartment building.

"I'm going to stay with you for a day or two," said Ethel.

"No, no, don't do that!" the widow told her. "I mean...please don't misunderstand...I want to be alone, to think of George. I don't want anyone with me. I do appreciate your offer....."

She finally made Ethel understand that she didn't even want her to go up in the apartment with her. Alone she started slowly to climb the three flights of stairs.

She was tired, very tired. But it was over. Thank God, it was over! The plan, which at first had seemed so hazardous, had worked. Her heart gave a great leap of joy, of anticipation.

Nothing remained to do now but to reach her own apartment. First she'd let the door. Then pull all the shades. Then wait a few minutes to make sure that no prying neighbor had seen her enter and was coming to offer more unwanted condolences. Then she'd close the door of the storage closet with the key that she had taken from her purse hand from his stuffy hiding place. His! Not hers! Then early this morning when he had helped her to load the coffin with his apparatus, and had driven to the lonely place, bought here and there around Cavea and each carefully wrapped in old blankets, then all tied together so they wouldn't shift.

They'd wait a few hours until the neighbors quieted down of the night ...they could have some cold supper in the meantime. Then he'd help George to dress in one of her nursing costumes...adjust the wig that so closely matched her own hair...and let his silky out and wear it he met anyone, he'd be taken for her; fortunately they were so nearly the same build. She'd be sure to give him the check for the $5,000 insurance, his clothes and checking at the station days before.

Another week and she'd be on her way, too...the insurance adjusted, for it would be easily and quickly collected, George was to go to New York first; would go to New York. Yesterday she had asked the owner of the building to try to subleas her apartment, furniture and all; it would look better than just walking out. She'd never need the furniture again; in a month or so she would be married in the De Jesuitro and sail for Australia. A new start, George and her baby, George ....and a new start on the insurance money.

At last, her apartment door. She fumbled in her bag for the key.... and then as the door opened, from within.

The owner of the building stepped toward her apologetically. "Oh, Mrs. Douglas," he exclaimed, "I'm so sorry if I startled you. I've just been showing your rooms to prospective tenants, and I thought I'd remain-ing to the woman downstairs and let them look around. I'm so startled...she's sort of funny about germs. He wanted to see the bedroom and the next few days, she got a company to fumigate it...hydrocyanic gas, I think it's called...to come in while you were gone. You know, people are so funny about germs because it's so deadly....."

"But, but, Mr. Schmidt, Mrs. Douglas? Fed sick?.....perhaps you've got a cold...My God, the woman's fainted!"

On the grounds that her husband could no longer support her in the position which her beauty gave her right to occupy, Mrs. Harry Lauder, the "Miss Belgium" of 1930, secured a divorce.

In addition to a "native problem" and racial ambivalence between French and English people, South Africa has also the so-called "Asiatic problem."

CUBS HAVE A SMART TEAM

"Babe" Herman Clouting Outfielder Has Added Punch

By Russell J. Newland, Associated Press Sports Writer.

San Francisco, March 24 (AP)—Charley Grimm is starting the first season as manager of the Chicago Cubs with a smile on his face and an ache in his back. He has been battling the lumbago for several weeks.

"The only grim part of the business I'm facing is that when my last ten batting to get out on the field," said the Brooklyn skipper of the defending National League champions.

The Cubs pilot starts this season with a strong club that probably should relieve Riggs Stephenson, first field star of the champs hitting burden.

Kiki Cuyler will roam centre field as usual. Frank Demaree, who made good in his first season up Bed Ray, will be on hand for emergency fly chasing duties and either Vlasto Kampouris or Phil Mc-Carron will round out the outfield. The Cubs are "set" in eight pitching positions with Burleigh Grimes, Guy Bush, Leroy Herrmann, Pat Malone, Lon Warneke, Charley Root, Lynn Nelson and Carroll Yerkes, the latter a left hander. Two other southpaws are Ralph Buckley and Al Benshaw, and the right handers, Lynn Wilson and Kyle Newman, are fighting for the ninth place.

Harvey vaudevians behind the plate are "Gabby" Hartnett, Jack Warner and Bill Campbell. The Infield is unchanged.

TECUMSEHS HAVE CHANCE TO WIN

Score Only Goal in Game with Riverside

London, Ont., March 24 (CP)—The slim chance London Tecumsehs today possessed of capturing the International Hockey League championship could be laid to the trusty stick of Lou Connelly whose fine shot scored the only goal in the London-Riverside game here last night.

Connelly's goal, scored within three minutes of the final whistle, gave Londes their first win in three games with the Riverside team for the title and placed them in a tie with Sarnia, leading the Intermediate leading Buffalo Bisons.

Sarnia defeated the champs with Quennerville was Davie Downie, Sarnia's sensational rookie, in a fight with Eric Pettigrew and whose action in throwing a stool at Referee Hall, paved the shoe his arrest at the end of the match. The Sarnia player was severely spoken for the fourth row and caused injury to her.

SPORTS

By Jimmy Thompson

In a blaze of glory the Belleville Arena closes its doors to public skaters on Saturday night when Manager Bill Hume, lover of hockey and all interested in winter sports in the community are deeply indebted to William "Billie" Hume of Wallaceville, Ontario, who generously the Belleville Arena was available for public use this season. It is enjoyed a question of a doubt, and Mr. Hume has not taken more than a personal interest in the Arena. It would have never opened its doors this season, both Mr. Hume and Manager Zadel appreciate to the fullest measure the wholehearted co-operation, which has been afforded by the sport-loving public of Belleville and district, for, perhaps the best way in which the public could show its appreciation to the management, and that one or even three referees, would have been helpless under the prevailing circumstances. It is deplorable, that some of the members of the College Cubs were still labouring under a pugnacious attitude, quite unbecoming after the visit had subsided and still wanted to battle even after changing their attitude of offence. After coming face to face with one of the locals, who did not seem at all afraid of their boastful talk they decided that discretion was the better part of valor and departed for home, where they can spread their wild tales before until the baseball season opens.

In order to start the ball rolling towards the building of a championship basketball team for next year the Arena league is being formed at the B.C.I. The league will be of the inter-form nature with the teams being as nearly matched as possible in size, younger and less experienced players will be given their goal on opportunity to show their Partridge their wares during the season's play-offs. Now is the time to build for next year and a start of knowledge should avail themselves to the opportunities of the possibilities of this loop. We have heard nothing about the Belleville Collegiate B.C.I. girls' team competing in the provincial finals, but it is to be hoped, that with such a strong group of girls at the B.C.I. that Belleville will be able to compete in the provincial girls' finals in 1933.

Things are don't have to worry about next year Babe" Ruth's home run record, for Babe Herman will succeed in smashing about every one of them. Babe pays, is somewhat of a mystery. But then he could go without fresh strawberries and cream for awhile according to some of the big time sport writers if it is a fact that Ruth's contract was signed with the stipulation that he would not eat the ball-and ballyhoo was merely to interest the fans for the future. The big time ballyhoing scheme did not go over so big, after all.

The latest dope from the spring training camps, down in the land of perpetual sunshine, brings news of the possibility of John J. McGraw, ex-manager of the New York Giants, returning to his one love, baseball, in the role of president of the junior club "White Sox." Previous to the death of Charles A. Comiskey, originator of the "Pale-Nose", Mc-Graw and "the Old Roman" were standing by his side and it would not surprise us to see "the Little Napoleon" and Eddie Mc-Kenzie Farrell at the helm of the Chicago American.

The Belleville General Hospital seems to be the haven for a number of athletes just at present. We visited the hospital on Monday incidentally left the institution perfectly well and successful operation for the removal of his appendix and Bill Hume, who sustained a badly broken shoulder in a recent hockey game, is progressing nicely. While making the rounds however, we met Frank Wallace, who hurls for the Rotarians ball nine, and Manager Ray Carey, member of hockey and baseball in Tweed who just leaving the hospital. We understand that Charlie O'Malley, way, say day new, take a trip to the hospital as he is suffering from a serious attack of appendicitis.

The burning question of the day is—Where will Ray Covert perform next season?

LEAFS TIE

Chicago Unbeaten on Toronto Ice This Year

Toronto, March 24 (CP)—Three of the National Hockey League's nine teams prepared to disband today, while the remainder appointed for the Stanley Cup and league championship play-offs. Americans and Chicago hung up their equipment after finishing the schedule last night and Ottawa were through a day later.

Chicago finished with a 6-0 beaten record on Toronto ice this season, when they drew with Maple Leafs 2-2.

Rangers and Canadiens who meet the week end in the Stanley Cup play-offs, played a wide open game in New York that ended with the blue shirts on the long end of a 4-3 score.

Frobisher Exhibition Limited at Montreal's free scoring game. Charlie Starkey and Baldy Northcott accounted for two goals and he had the same number of assists and Francis Hinsley got the fifth goal in points by assisting three times and shooting one goal. Donnie Patterson, Lloyd Klein and Red Hamilton got the other American goals.

Dave Trottier, Baldy Northcott and Hockey Smith accounted for Maroons' scores the latter two also aiding in the scoring. Lionel Haynes, Earl Robinson and Jimmy Ward helped Trottier to an assist each.

Rangers Win

Canadiens were down before Rangers from the three-goal third-period offensive at New York Garden, a scoreless first period, Gerald Carson and Lorne Chabot battling in the second. Almost half way through the third, Bill Hutton added to give Rangers the lead that Hatch duplicated a few minutes later, whereupon Lester Patrick's pass to Frankie Boucher for Canadiens' second goal.

Charlie Gardiner wound up the season with a flurry for Chicago when he stopped 66 shots some of them while wearing a hard hat a spectator had thrown up and lost on the ice. Leafs held a 2-1 lead over Chicago Black Hawks at the period, when Donnie McPeyon and Hap Day scored for Leafs and Rommes and Roger Jenkins to tie the score, and send the game into overtime.

Harvey Jackson scored the first goal, taking a pass from Day and from Bill Thome but say it matched Hooley Smith's goal for Canadiens, when Paul Thompson took Tommy Cook's flip for a Black Hawk goal. Day gave Joe Scott the game goal for Leafs second goal in the third period.

HAMILTON PATS ARE ELIMINATED ON ROUND

Niagara Falls Stage Comeback With Four Goals

Niagara Falls Ont., March 24—(CP)—Penal with the Allan Cup elimination meant also to some extent, Hamilton. Niagara Falls Senior Cataracts drew upon their comeback reserves for the third time since the 1933 hockey playoffs started in Ontario and today they are still in contention for National supremacy.

Last night Cataracts defeated Hamilton Patricias, senior "B" representatives, 4 to 0, to take the two-game series by a total score of 6-5. In playoff games with Toronto Marlboros and Port Colborne, Falls Cataracts compelled to rally to stave off elimination. They had been shooted 3-0, at Hamilton Tuesday. The new medal, while standing aloof by their more highly rated rivals in the first 40 minutes, rendered their dones when they dropped back to a defensive game in the last checking and allowed Cataracts to shoot the only pucks, which they proved their most potent offensive threat during the current campaign.

RED WINGS WIN TITLE

Defeat Q. A. V. Grads For Top Rung of Ki-Y Juvenile Loop

Frank Empson's Red Wings romped home winners of the Juvenile group of the local Ki-Y league, when they defeated Art Bateman's Q.V.S. "Grads" by the score of 4 to 1 at the Arena last night. The newly crowned group champions ended a two year reign of the Q.V.S. "Grads" and in every they rode rough-shod over them to win the group title.

The "wings" were far too big in stature and too strong afoot for their smaller rivals. The Defence of McElrath and Andrews proved a stumbling block in front of Baker and the little "Grads", although they had but few shots, could not penetrate the rugged rear guard set up by the winners. The front line of Empson, Bateman and Lloyd Hall were also too fast for the "grads-ales". Little Douglas Osborne, the pint sot custodian for the losers, played his usual steady game but to little Frank Pepper, who was not half the height or weight of the opposing goalie, must go the honors for the best game. The Red Wings' defence of McElrath and Andrews also played well for the losing team.

McElrath scored all the scoring in the initial frame on a lone rush while McCreary added the second counter after a little time later. Empson and Hanna scored in the middle period while Hall scored the back to score number four in the final period. The line-up:

Belleville prizes will be afforded the group winning Red Wings by the league.

The line-up:

Red Wings—Goal, Baker, defence McElrath and Andrews; centre, Hanna; wings, Empson and Lloyd Hall.

Q.V.S. "Grads"—Goal, Robinson; defence McCreary and Connor; centre Cooper; wings Bateman and Hall, subs Bates, Pepper, Hall and Frank Pepper.

Little Benny's Note Book

There was 2 fellows late for school today, being Joe and Leroy Shoester and Mike Kitty and Mike Kitty made us all go up and stand in the corner with our faces to the wall, this is too bad, 2 of you all in one morning, the class record for punctuality, will be shattered to bits at this rate. I'm going to make you all remain one hour after school unless sy of you happens to have a absolutely necessary reason, for being late, she said.

Well G. I'm late on account of a funeral, Leroy Shoester said.

Well, so you ought to say you had to attend a funeral this morning! Joseph Kitty said and Leroy said, Well I didn't exactly attend it but I had to wait for the cars to go by and I counted account of it, being bad luck to run between the carriages of a funeral.

I dont know about it being bad luck but I do know it is a mark of respect, was it a long funeral? Mike Kitty said and Leroy said, Mama? she also said, if you were there very many carriages?

Mamah, I was wawking along the carbstone and seeing how few times I could fall off in a block, I said, and she said, O really, and why did you half to do that?

Because I started, I said, and she said, And was it absolutely necessary to start and I said, No mam, but once I'd started I had to finish.

Excuse overruled, and how about you, Herkl Judge? Miss Kitty said, and Shorty said, Well C, somebody asked me to do them a favor.

A few more particulars, if you'll do me that favor, Miss Kitty said, and Shorty said, It was some kid. He had a 'football and he could kick it a mile and he was all alone so he couldn't thro it back again without a lot of trouble, so he asked me to kick it back awhile.

His being overruled the saddest of any.

Correct Manners

(By Beatrice Fairfax)

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When one lives on the second floor and goes downstairs to admit callers, is it correct to lead the way upstairs to the living-room door, then step back for your guests to enter, or should you allow the visitors to go first and then follow?

2. Is it correct to offer to take a gentleman's coat and hat, or does he take care of them himself?

1: Usually, under these circumstances, the hostess will find it easier to step forward to lead the way, saying, as she does so, "May I go first and lead the way?", or "May I show you the way?" You act as you consider best if I go first so that I may lead the way", or "May I go first and show you the way?"

Of course there is no reason why she may not suggest that her guests go first, but usually this order-of-going makes for awkwardness.

I have always put the place used first furthest from the plate.

If I am wrong, please correct me.

A constant and benefitted reader

You aren't wrong. You act on the upstairs landing, when the guests must wait for their hostess to arrive to tell them the way.

2. The woman should never take the man's coat and hat. She directs him where it is to be placed, and he himself takes care of them.

SILVER ARRANGEMENT

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Kindly inform me if the arrangement of flat silver has changed. A dear friend of mine tells me that the latest is to place the piece used first next to the plate. In other words, to work from the plate out.

Dear Miss Beeckman:

When travelling in a Pullman, what is the custom in regard to tips —should the conductor, as well as the porter, be tipped, and how much?

In Doubt

We do not tip the conductor on the train. Just the porter, who receives at least twenty-five cents for an over-night trip, and usually thirty cents. For special service, we would give at least fifty-cents, and perhaps a dollar. The waiter in the dining-car is tipped after every meal.

ACKNOWLEDGING CONDOLENCES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please advise me in your column, if it is correct and good form to acknowledge sympathy letters received when I have lost a member of the family, or is this unnecessary.

A Reader.

For every letter of sympathy, for every floral tribute we should write a note of thanks. Just a sentence or two but written (not a printed or engraved card), and sincerely worded.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

Fashion Flashes

(By Alice Alden)

The Class gather as the demand for plaids goes. Very charming that one with a suit in a blouse of organza, which is starched within. It is in red, blue and tan on a white ground and is finished at neckline and sleeves with tiny ruffles.

Take a bow or two and your hat is trimmed. A spring hat that has attracted much attention is of black rough straw and has a deep crown, square and open at back to reveal the hair. In front there is an upturn of grosgrain bow and there is a short starched veil.

Just right—so easy but formal affairs is a frock of black crepe with white crepe bodice joined by pointed collar. The interesting sleeves are made of pleated layers of pleated net and terminate de sote, which is a high collar.

A shining light amongst frocks is a lovely slinky evening gown made of sheppering satin. It is absolutely untrimmed and has a decolletage that is very high in front while at back the frock is cut out down to the waist.

Under the palms fashion stylists are watching the new fashions as many advance styles are seen worn by many leaders. A charming frock is a suspender frock of white broche worn with a blouse of white chiffon with white dots. The blouse has short puffed sleeves and a Windsor tie.

Keep a tab on tabs as trimming. After many seasons of neglect the tab is popular again. That smart little morning frock of sheer wool crepe has tiny tabs at cuffs and collar, made of tabs of white piqué. Then the neckline of the frock also has tabbed detail.

Beauty .... By Helen Jameson

Hear Ye! Hoe is Are Lower

There's been a deal of bowling going on about high heels these women listened, others sneered. Stomping along on stilts seemed to be something practically every woman had to do, though why she did it she didn't know. The extra highs were regarded as a lot of tiresome old dodos but they won't be any more, because they are reinforced by a group which every woman recognizes, Fashion, the Universal Dictator.

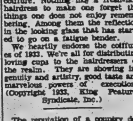
When Fashion says it, woman does it. She can't afford to sit on the sidelines when the world is dancing by. She conforms, steps in line.

It looks as if we're going to be footloose and fancy free, and that is something to shout about. Smart shoe shops are rounding up, which does not release the little pigs from cramped confinement, but there is the chance to get upon the sole of the shoe. What the lowered heel will do to improve figures and remove curdled dispositions is plenty.

With heels elevated beyond a certain point, the spinal column takes on the wrong pitch, instead of being a straight line from the middle of the back to the heels, it takes on an outward curve, that contracts the chest, interferes with the normal development of the breasts, makes ugly shelves of collar bones which should be graceful curves and predooms protrudes. If women had discarded high heels when everything consists into furnaces, got rid of their fat prunes and took a normal breathing, there would be fewer cases of tuberculosis now.

High heels are a worse health menace than the steel corset ever was. He that can't wear a thirty-inch waist into a two-band span.

Many good things follow the shoe designers! The oxford is to be popular. It is the only shoe-type support which is lacking in the pump and the beloved T-strap and that's new styles show the Oxford with its more demurity. Grandma remembers very well when the Grecian bend was simply the way Grandma was attached to it spiritually, not physically. Then the maker of curls made on a wire foundation, and the look is to be bewitched in the dresser drawer at night. She thinks it is to be bedeviled when she made fresh curls with a brush over her finger. We're seen her.



If the coming April maid feels that a permanent is incumbent let her place, her troubled head in charge of a skilful hairdresser for the doing. He will do such shearing as never was, nothing like a new coiffure. Nothing like a fresh-laid hairdress to make one feel that the things one does not enjoy remembering. Among the new hairdresses is the long looking glass that has started to go on fatigue because of the shortness of the coiffures of 1932. We're all for distributing looking glass to the hairdressers of the realm. They are showing intricate braids and twisted tails and marvelous powers of execution.

Quick, sure relief with Fruit-a-tives

Spring Shearing Getting Riotous

Lambs skipping to the hair slaughtering block. Crowds of them. Short heels and bobbed hair are leading the coiffure parade. Makes a woman feel positively dizzy and silly when she remembers the critical look with which her mother and her stern manners who said in the pertago that short hair was a symbol of passing fancy. And the male smarty who declared that women would not be bobbed. He made men wanted them to be Godiva like.

It didn't please a lot of men when the bobbing was first going on. They slammed doors, pounded tables, raised ferocity, had cues and threatened divorce. A heap of good it did them. What was a woman to do after getting plucked to skin and bone? The vimminel They liked it. They did. So they bobbed and bobbed.

Four years ago the amalgamated association of hair dressers was organized. Back to pigtails was the slogan. They were out for revenge on the matter, went through the formative stages of bobbed hair and hair was a mess of sprouts, got enough material to do what with! Make wigs on the nape. A good joke. If a bun has any meaning no woman has got one. Bobbed hair is.

Then buns were banned. That has the size of a walnut appeared. It was demure and romantic. Ringlets were ordered. If a ringlet is going to hang half its length of hair not longer than two and one half inches, else it will die of its own length. Detail! Shearing marched on. . . .

No detail of appearance so throws a woman out of beauty form as a hairdress that doesn't belong. Might just as well get in line. The severely plain, waved and sculptured coiffure is slightly old style though there are those who are entitled to keep it—the tailored type for instance or the type with the piquant touch. You get it by adding a pair of bead catchers, maybe. Or going in for a bang that starts look long on one side and evaporates completely on the other. A new slant, one might say. Small curls along either side of the parting are new. Make you think of an old fashioned curly mustache, but that's no argument against 'em.

As has been said before the back sneak up. That makes for more severity, more dignity. Grandma remembers very well when the Grecian bend was simply the way Grandma was attached to it spiritually, not physically. Then the maker of curls made on a wire foundation, and the look is to be bewitched in the dresser drawer at night. She thinks it is to be bedeviled when she made fresh curls with a brush over her finger. We've seen her.

The Beauty Box

(By Helen Follett)

On what special part of her countenance does a woman slap the first fling of powder? Answer: on her nose. Comes natural, she has to. Her mind on that feature. Her beauty toshnic is all wrong. The powder pad is overloaded, hence yet it be flirted on the neck. From there it may travel up over the chin and cheeks in powdery dust. Or she getting the leavings which are enough. A heavily powdered nose is a common sight, creating the fancy that it isn't a nose, but a marshmallow. Cosmetic calamine crowds into the crease of the nose, in clearness and cleverness which allow no flagging of interest. The opening like so many English plays is quiet with a baggageman placing luggage on a parcel and on the express tag of a dog. This is but the sound in a moment the whole interior of the station looms with the bustling confusion from which the chief figures in the play gradually emerge as the master playwright brings attention to bear upon them. Much use is made of the telephone booth as in the case of the youngest of one or the characters as an English-speaking audience.

As inevitably add as certainly as the express drives through from Paris to the Eternal City, so certainly and with such irresistable appeal "The Home Express" bears its audience through one of the greatest of screen productions. "Home Express" which was shown on Thursday afternoon and evening at the Capitol Theatre to large crowds at the beginning or the three-day showing is called the greatest of productions which the British movie industry has turned out. This is a big claim and yet there are many points which support that view.

The play is built on massive lines and the plot is rounded out with a clearness and cleverness which allow no flagging of interest. He walks a chance to get to the train, a man who is later to be revealed as the double-crossing crook with a stolen Van Dyck canvas. With the appearance of the millionaire philanthropist Alistair McBane, another angle is added and as events play out it is revealed. Two crooks climb aboard and it is soon evident that the leader of them, Zorita, has stolen the missing Van Dyck. Whose hands this peace of art will finally fall as Zorita was at Zorita to get the picture is made, how Zorita kills Poole, the possessor of the Van Dyck, how a transformation after leaving a young man and a young husband is completed and how a French police official finally fastens the murder on Zorita and how Zorita finally throws himself from the train, these are very cleverly worked out.

Leonard Veidt as Zorita was a sinister figure brilliantly portrayed. Donald Calthorp makes a fine crook as Poole. Jean Barry as Mrs. Maxted, the wife who is running away, gives a very fine study of mood. Cedric Hardwick takes the part of Alistair McBane, the millionaire philanthropist, who begrudges his secretary such fare and who grows no like to the waiter. Frank Vosper is an admirable Monsieur Joliff, the French police officer, who is a well a big expert. Esther Ralston plays with much ability the difficult role of the actress whose old love returns for Tony, who has "gone bad" with Zorita.

The scenes gave a verisimilitude of life, as in such instances as the yard game, the probe into the mystery of the dining car scenes and over all was a supreme command of the skill of acting which makes these English pictures so powerful and wonderful. The train picture does not pile up horrors, the murder is deftly suggested in the fire-flash scene of reserve. Another interesting feature is that though many of the characters are supposed to represent foreigners, the appeal is to

DEBATE ON BUDGET SOON

First Critical Shot Will Come From Hon. J. L. Ralston

Ottawa, March 24 (CP)—Today marks the chief of the regular fall session of parliament. The government, the discussion of the budget, Hon. E.N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, for the next few days will be expounding on the moves of the private members, will have to sit in the east and hear his 1933 policy criticised, perhaps chopped up to bits, lauded, praised and defended.

The first critical shots from the Liberal opposition will be fired today by Hon. J. L. Ralston, former Minister of National Defence. Few but Mr. Rhodes delivered his speech Tuesday, Mr. Ralston and other prominent members have been analyzing it, collecting information for the purpose of the attack on the new taxes and preparing for the debate.

Yesterday the House gave second reading to the bill which extends the Board Act for another year and adds to the powers the act confers over the grain trade. Some progress was made in advancing the measure for promulgation of new grades. It will come before the House again today. After it is disposed of the budget debate will begin.

The principle that parliament must first give its authority before an expenditure force may be sent out of Canada was stressed in the House which had under consideration a government measure providing for the administration of visiting forces from other parts of the British commonwealth while in Canada. The legislation is necessitated by the attendance at the various Dominions as set forth in the Statute of Westminster.

CANADA BUD SHARES EASIER

Toronto, March 24 (CP)—Provocation of a severe dividend for holders of Canada Bud Brewery stock occasioned some selling of that issue today on the Toronto Stock Exchange and the price broke away to five to six points under the previous close. Trade was light, however, and the decline was not accompanied by any pressure to sell in the general list. Prices were generally steady to firm.

Canada Bud opened at 64 and sold down to 58 before the close. Other industrials were steady to firm, with Brazilian Traction up a point at 15 1-2. Banks were steady to firm, with Commerce up 1-4 to 97 and Montreal 1-8 to 94 1-2. Golds were steady to firm, with Hollinger up 1-4 to 7.00 and Noranda 1-8 to 32 1-2. Base metals were steady to firm, with Nickel up 1-4 to 10 and Mond 1-8 to 15 1-8. Papers were steady to firm, with Abitibi up 1-8 to 3 1-8 and Price 1-4 to 5 1-4. Utilities were steady to firm, with Montreal Power up 1-8 to 25 1-8 and Ottawa Light 1-4 to 15. Western oils were steady to firm, with Supertest up 1-8 to 3 1-8 and Home B 1-4 to 5 1-4.

YOUTHS UNDER "GAS" CONTROL

Hamilton, March 24—(CP)—"You boys have gathered enough convictions to keep you in the penitentiary for the best part of your lives," said Magistrate Lethbridge today in police court when he handed out suspended sentences to John Boyd, St. Thomas; Boyd, Howard Latzan and Percy Sinden, each 18. They had previously pleaded guilty to a charge of motor thefts of gasoline, license plates and a car owned by Sinden's employer father.

"I think these boys have been under the influence of gasoline, and Mr. Boyd is a wise father he will remove the temptation of the car," said the Magistrate.

The deputation argued a change in the Act for the sake of the unemployed man who did not wish to invest so much as the price of a case of beer.

U. S. ARE OFF GOLD STANDARD

Bank of Montreal Summary Optimistic For Canada

Toronto, March 24 (CP)—Though occasioning some interruption to international trade, the present temporary inconvenience by the lack of quotation of New York funds, the banking crisis there and the fact that the large did not cross the International boundary, is overlooked in the monthly business summary by the Bank of Montreal.

Describing the banking situation as the feature of business conditions at present, the summary says it is not "that for a time the United States has departed from the gold standard". The United States, says the summary, has turned to pay out the coin domestically; has prohibited gold exporting, being in this respect much in the position of Canada, and by the completion of severe precautions to be applied to banks has brought back to banks a large volume of the currency in circulation.

The Canadian budget delivered in the House of Commons March 21, the summary says in a review of the changes announced, is in evidence in the financial stability of Canada despite unfavorable world conditions.

MART TRADE DESULTORY

Backing And Filling Action on New York Exchange

New York, March 24 (AP) — The stock market was a waiting affair today, with the ticker service backing and filling in desultory trading with an irregularly downward trend.

The average improvement shown in the Federal Reserve statements was not authoritative, and failure of those in mercantile reviews of same further depressed sentiment. There were inadequate to generate new buying power. The bank holiday and more interested in the progress of farm relief legislation than in anything else. Commission houses reported a complete absence of public participation.

Scattered selling carried a number of issues temporarily off a point or two, including American Telephone, Du Pont, United States Steel, Johnson Oil, and Allied Chemical, although these losses were reduced and in some instances converted by early afternoon. Rails fluctuated irregularly.

CHAPTER ONE

Alexandra Trumbull had just had the astonishing experience of being rescued by some popular girl in the office of Cavendish & Bartlett.

The hour had certainly been her absolutely without warning: she had been only vaguely amused by the proceeding. Her own role had been cast without consulting her—the long Myra Symes, who was in front mourning and always appreciated to have been coming. She came last, to Sandra, was just one of those "office girls."

But, whatever Sandra thought everyone else in the office took the popularity test in deadly earnest; nothing else was discussed for many a noontime. Girls reflected and mused and struggled over filling in the long blanks when the ballots were cast.

"Is she liked?" "Is she tidy?" "Is she prompt?" ran some of the questions. "Is she nice to the office boy?" "Is she fond of outdoor sports, books, cards, dancing?" What to do men who have business associations with, or the right of her?

"Wa'-riviection!" Sandra had murmured to her insecure neighbor.

"I don't know what you have anything to do with me at all," Laura Hogg had answered bitterly.

When her own name was called as the winner Alexandra Trumbull had experienced an astonishment amounting to terror. It would have been extremely difficult for her to come forward from the assembled group in the main office.

She had been sitting in her usual ordinary place, at her own desk, and then bringing her long, strange, hazel eyes to the earnest face of Mr. Runyon, who was murdering on about efficiency and organization spirit.

"Miss Alexandra Trumbull of the main office wins. . . ." The rest of the had served to confound her to her feet; the clapping hands, and laughter and applause in the office had made her feel humbled and ashamed.

"Oh, no—not I!" she had stammered in the hall. All the office people's kindly words had come back—"fellowship, willing work, nerve to look you in the eye in trouble, kindness, sweetness."

"Oh, sir, listen," she had protested, being pushed forward by Myra Symes, and finding herself in front of the room, to face the tanned, fine-looking Carter Cavendish himself. Her heart began to beat fast.

"Congratulations!" he had said. Her own hand had met his grip of her; his big fingers and with his left hand he had bestowed her the fruit or flowers—a basket of fruit, she remembered, a check for a hundred dollars, which she had put into a daughter until she outwardly panicked on the spot.

"Now, don't lose that check!" Carter had said, smiling, when he had recovered it.

"I shouldn't have it, Mr. Cavendish," Sandra had continued to protest, "I haven't done anything. I didn't make her scarce was wildly, it did not make her scarce—as I hoped it would be—bowed and smiled kindly, and murmured a few indifferent words that I think you must let the other young ladies decide that."

And then, as he turned over, Mr. Cavendish and his secretary, Miss Forsyth, Carter's assistant suddenly disappeared into their own secret offices, and the girls, bubbling with laughter that they had taken Miss Trumbull so completely by surprise, gathered about her.

The episode had left her only a throbbing sensation of shame: she did not like to remember it. She would very much have liked the fifty hundred dollars to old Jim Trumbull, who had been ailing, and been taken to the city hospital a few weeks before.

The last thing for her lay not in the girls' choice of her manner and their shrill, self-embarrassing enthusiasm. It lay in the memory of a brief, strained, important young man, who had spared a second from business to give the wheedling young lady the prize and a glimpse of the fine, handsome, self-contained! What had he ever done to be so handsome, so sure of himself, so kindly supporting and superior?

And he certainly was superior, Sandra realized, as she joy in bed the following Sunday morning and sadly looked about the shabby room in which she had never thought much of the proceeding. Her own role had been cast without consulting her—the long Myra Symes, who was in front mourning and always appreciated to have been coming. She came last, to Sandra, was just one of those "office girls."

ROLY YOUNG STATES "CAVALCADE" BEST PICTURE HE HAS SEEN

Roly Young, noted photoplay critic of the Toronto Star Weekly, speaks in the following glowing terms of Noel Coward's "Cavalcade" coming to the Belle Saturday, for four days:

"Quite aside from its patriotic appeal, and judged solely as a motion picture, "Cavalcade" ranks, I believe, as the greatest piece of screen literature ever shown. Proof of this is its phenomenal success in United States despite the fact that it is as British as roast beef and Yorkshire pudding. There are many contributing factors in the perfection it achieves, such as the magnificent work of the cast, the spectacular production and masterly direction of Frank Lloyd, but it all boils down to the fact that Noel Coward provided a fool-proof script and insisted, when he sold the movie rights, that his script should be followed closely. So closely has that been done that the picture is almost a literal transcription of the stage play, with fade-outs instead of curtains between scenes. Coward's original dialogue, also, is followed practically verbatim, and admirably his stage directions, such as the handling of the Titanic scene, the Queen's funeral, and the little detail of the man blowing a carnival "sicker" in Mrs. Marryot's face in the Armistice celebration in London. All of which convinces me that the vast portion of the credit for "Cavalcade's" magnificent impressiveness must be laid at the door of its author. . . .

"There are numerous angles from which "Cavalcade" can be appropriately, all of which 'cause one to wax enthusiastic. Second only to its intense, as a dramatic work, in my mind, its value as a historic document. I learned more about the manner and customs of Victorian England, and more of the history of the first third of this century in the two hours of "Cavalcade" than I did in any two years at any of the various institutions of learning whose portals I graced with enthusiasm in my youthful days. For example, I never before appreciated the love and reverence that England held for Queen Victoria. It was a tradition, I had learned about, "Cavalcade" made it a glittering reality. I shall always remember how that five kings rode at her funeral. Oh years since that was told me, and I had completely forgotten). I shall, always remember that she was a small woman, and that Edward and Roberts made a national hero that the crowd worshipped. I had known this before and that he held up his hand to restore the demonstration. These are just examples of the details of history which this picture gives, and which, although showing them on the screen.

In following Coward's script, the director has shown the same fine restraint that Coward wrote into his play. I am curious to know whether this was so by the writing, or merely consciousness of the limitations of the stage for which he wrote. I fear the latter. If it was the former, he certainly wrote scenes which showed no concern for the problems involved in staging. The Boer War is talked about, not shown. The funeral of the Queen passes outside the range of the camera and the episodes are told only in sound and dialogue — not a literal transcription of the stage play, with fade-outs instead scene, with the story of the tragedy told by the musical background and a lip-preserver, the great way, he is her theatrical—it is simple and sincere. These are some of the reasons why it is distinctly and inadequately expressed for. I find this the most difficult review I have ever written about a belief that "Cavalcade" is the greatest motion picture I have ever seen."

Youthful resence in Noel CowPrude Jeans, and Frank Lawton, ard's "Cavalcade," is depicted by one outstanding English actors. Coming to the Belle soon.

In the huge cast (some of the scenes contain 15,000 players) it is almost unfair not to mention some of them, but heaviest commendation fall to Diana Wynyard and Clive Brook, in connection with George Arliss' portrayals is overwhelming, and it increases as they grow older.

"Cavalcade" in the greatness of its practical theatre writing is truer theatrical—it is simple and sincere. These are some of the reasons why it is distinctly and inadequately expressed for. I find this the most difficult review I have ever written about a belief that "Cavalcade" is the greatest motion picture I have ever seen."

About 10,000,000 trees were planted last year in the United States in connection with George Washington bicentennial celebrations.

For Baby's Bath

More than that of any other member of the family, baby's tender, delicate skin needs the greatest care and attention. The soft soothing oils in Baby's Own Soap make it specially suitable for babies, and its clinging fragrance reminds one of the roses of France which help to inspire it.

"It is best for you and Baby too".

love affair, the normal marriage and home that might have grew to her otherwise. Sandra thought she could imagine exactly how good, plain Mr. Stevens, the cashier, or Ralph Miller, Gertrude's hotel-keeping brother-in-law, would seem to her after Carter Cavendish.

The whole thing irritated her, irritated her in a way she could not define. She disliked the subject and the thought of Carter Cavendish, but she could seem to avoid neither.

A misery or unrest possessed her.

It was late summer now; the popularity contest was a muddle in the background, and the Sunday upon which Sandra had discovered the picture of Carter Cavendish in the paper three weeks gone by. Sandra's mother noted that she had grown thinner, grown graver, and that her eyes had new depths and sort of brown tweeds to the office, the favorite pale blue and the favorite brown hat. She had grown sudden-ly tired of the summer skies and the loose blue coat. It was pleasant to be believed again, to go out freely to the exhilarating air. Her brown bag tossed firmly under her arm, her brown fox skin loose about her shoulders.

Her own brown-and-caramel beauty set off by the tweeds, the fur, the brown bag, and the pale gray suede and deep eye sockets, for the moment, were not to be matched. But the skin of the living man was unchanged. He was there, and there, and there was no escape from him. He was there in a smile and nod that, without a word, told her that he knew. He gave Sandra as she came in.

"Listen, I've got something to tell you. Do you get me? You're all wet, Listen; it'll be a washout. . . ."

Sandra, now on the bed, had stopped and had stretched back in the corner of the cab to think. Then she somersaulted. Busily asked Mrs. Trumbull if she could take a certain envelope—the familiar, red Cibre-paper envelope—to the office for her, as address just up the street; the party was waiting, and Ken, the driver, was in a hurry.

"Sure enough, it's Miss Trumbull, Carter," now on the bed, busy with the papers in the wire basket. His straightened. "Got another winning any more contests lately?" he asked.

"Once is enough." Sandra responded, outwardly with composure, inwardly growing under strange new thrilling waters.

"I told you what she did with it!" Gertrude Curtis explained.

Sandra and Carter Cavendish looked squarely at each other. The girl broke no promise, but her eyes warm color flash up under her clear skin.

Surprisingly; he saw that she was annoyed at the other woman; it seemed him to add encouragement.

"No; what did she do?"

"She gave it to Hutchinson's wife —the janitor's wife," Gertrude Carter, standing at with a loyal, spoke-up dance at Sandra's hot cheeks.

Carter frowned, but Sandra was man, but Sandra would not expand. She shrugged, smiled lightly and, with a hasty look south and strange, long, brown eyes, and taking the envelope from Miss Trumbull, turned away.

"Well, Carter said, almost sharply; "why should you do that?"

"It's a matter of honor," Sandra explained it, still smiling.

"Sandra couldn't have done that!" he protested.

Sandra merely widened her eyes again.

In another moment, shaking and excited and thrilling, she was in the big elevator with the other office girls, she was speeding down the street, But it was no earthly street that she walked on that day, and no carry sun that above, no usual world that moved about her. She was alone, she had scored. Or if she had not scored, at least he had not scattered her to the winds.

The rest of the day was a blur. Psychological champagne ran in Sandra's veins.

FIRST CHANCE TO SEE SOCIAL EVIL DRAMA

"End of The Road" Starring Revelation And Is Loose As Ages

The End of the Road", coming to the Capitol for three days beginning next Wednesday is one of the most discussed motion pictures that has ever been seen in this Province. This is the first opportunity to see a picture which has been banned in many centre records throughout all parts of the Dominion.

A startling and impressive lesson to the youthful and the mature. "The End of the Road" is being exhibited under the auspices of the Canadian Social Hygienic Council in an attempt to inform the public of the dread consequences which follow youthful indiscretion and neglect.

Part of the campaign to eliminate venereal disease, the film graphically proves that the transmission, partly by mental and physical anguish is too great a price to pay for the careless indulgence of weak impulse. Medically accurate in every detail and overflowing with authentic case-histories, "The End of the Road" should be seen by every father and mother, every young man and woman. Parents owe it to their children; sweethearts owe it to their future. Separate showings have been arranged for men and women.

"If you believe the world can very well get along without religion, you probably mean without the other man's religion."—Jan Ruisbroek.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

Curiously Gan inquired "Who am I?"

Day shrugged, "My guess is no one knows. Some say you're a god named Yen. We picked up a good deal of him mighty few of them succeeded in escaping. If I'm correct you are, I guess you sound have named him Yen."

Yay father chattered in nervous excitement. "It's true! It's true! It was Jay not in the clay but in Father's skin."

Gan's eyes were shining and he spoke with confidence. "Now we have fairies in Ireland, why not in China? Lee Ying was the wisest man in the world, he knew things we'll never understand. He was a sorcerer, a magician, a genius, I think he was right."

"And so do I," Alanna said softly, his brow cooler and had her cheek against his shoulder.

Day smiled and then looking at Gan said, "Well, I'm getting on and that's all I can tell you. I'm mighty glad that I inspected you in time to help you first-hand. Although the truth may be hard to some people, I'm sure you'll be mighty sorry for both of you kids."

Gan's brown, sharp face in closing it over, was asleep when Sam Lee entered pacing the floor. His head was bowed down into the dusty canyon beneath him. Dawn was not far away, for he was a white man! Lee Ying's virtuous acts had lived after him, his ghost had reached forth from the grave and unveiled the truth. The night had marked an epoch in Sam's life and the dawn would find him a wiser man as it should there was something unfathomable about it all and the things which would have stirred him to the bottom of his being were almost unnoticed. That was no doubt, because he had spent the night in a state of mental turmoil which the astonishing discovery, and he wondered if the shock was the work of that ancient spirit which looked after Lee Ying, the man of the hour, or the door of thirteen hundred years ago. What was his sacrifice?... Much luck, great riches and high honors were to be his, if he had hearkened and kept his tongue true, but in reality he had been a successful blasphemer. Gently Yen Lee Ying's hand: he had known the truth and because he had not even proved himself a traitor there.

He was glad to know that he was white, nevertheless an odd remark, he marveled in the back of his mind; it offended him in spite of himself that he had spoken. In what way was he better now than he had been a moment? Today he was the son of gentle, a noble, a charitable and a godly man, today he was a gutter-snipe, and yet he was the same man! He was a multiplist; His princess has opened her arms to him, and he knew it not nor did he, in him ran the blood of countless generations, and in the caps of some native jackal of the slums. His mother who had borne him was a slut and Yen Lee Ying's memory, but for all he knew, an honest woman. Yet that night he felt that he must take pride. Great wealth and adulation, he felt, would be his, and he gladly appreciated humor contributed by the irony of fate.

During these several hours he had been saying farewell to China-town, to Lee Ying's memory, to Gan and all its deities, for with the coming of summer a new life, he knew, would dawn and he realized that henceforth he would be a much out of place here as he had been elsewhere. It had been a painful parting it had meant the tearing up of tender roots that he had never suspected until now. As he had walked here under the stars he had been startled by the change in her figure at his side; he had moved slowly for some time, as if fearful of waking her.

How high Lee Ying towered over other men. What other son had Yen Lee Ying to follow? Not Gan, Father? No. His father was a shiftless, a nameless, a foreign fanatic, and Yen Lee Ying, the man of Gan named Duane... Who was the wise man? Was he the father of Lee Ying or that policeman? Which of these was unchanged the power of the gods!

...Truth! Where shall one search for it, in the mind or in the heart? In which of these two men should he rest his weary head?

Sam entered his house and went on into his own chamber, slowly and methodically, he disrobed and prostrated himself; then put on his ceremonial Chinese robe, his cap with the ruby button, his white hose and slippers and then with the first feel he moved to the door of that shrine and there he knelt to Lee Ying in worship to his gods. He slid the panel back, stepped inside and closed it behind him. The enigmatic image stared at him from fixed, inscrutable eyes.

His lit Joe Joss sticks and watched the idols face, and then the joss sticks' smoke arise, then he knelt before the image and bowed his head and bowed his head.

What he spoke it was in the singsong language he had learned at the knees of Fan Yi.

"I, Samuel Lee, One to whom I owe all joy and happiness, and whose virtues I shall try, fervently from henceforward to you. In this still hour of the day I pray reverently son as base by loathsome and repaying, his head to the ground. His groans in deep pain. Gan is black and the great is black and demons of doubt rifled it. Make him to know the great forgiveness and the reality of truth. Cleave to him as he emerge to you.

"You have resigned your earthly mantle and you walk clear-eyed inside the bright waters of Celestial streams, all wisdom and selfless. Mine is yours. Pause, I beseech you, and plead for me in my search you, and plead for me in my heart. Give me faith in the reality and the eternity of our oneness. Out of nothing you created me, you clad me from your bounty; I am a child you back in fief and disappointment but my soul is sick and my spirit is weak. I pray, I beg a temple built by pain around a grain of sand: around the jewel of your heart I pledge myself to love for me I pledge myself to build a stately monument to my enduring trust in you."

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

JIMMY SKUNK RETREATS

The wise will sometimes beat retreat
And save themselves from worse defeat.

Jimmy Skunk

Retreat may be a disgrace. Then again it may not. It all depends on circumstances. It is worth often that Jimmy Skunk retreated for he is so independent that he is sometimes called the Toddling Terror. Old Mr. Toad Foster Rear steps aside for him and Yowler the Bobcat keeps out of his way. No, it isn't often that Jimmy retreats.

He had seen Peter Rabbit escape in a bramble-tangle and Reddy Fox, in his own words, hadn't got off in a rage and had chuckled. Then he had kept on about his business and looking for fat beetles. So early in the season they were few and far between and all the better tasting between and all the better tasting for that. And while he looked for beetles he kept his eyes open for anything else that might help to round out a dinner. So he didn't fail to investigate every little hole he came across in the chance that it might contain an addition to his bill of fare, a lower for instance. Now and then Jimmy enjoys a Mouse, especially a little one, quite as much as does Reddy himself.

So it was that he was led to turn aside to investigate a hollow log under the roots of an old stump. It looked like a place for Mother Mouse to make her home. Probably it led too far in and too deep for him to bother to try. It was worth while, but there was nothing to be lost by investigating, so Jimmy went over to it and without even bothering to sniff at it thrust in a black paw and felt around. Almost at once he touched something soft and furry.

"Hah!" exclaimed Jimmy under his breath, "As I live there is a Mouse in there and a big one, by the feel of it. I can just get hold of him I will pull him out."

He had withdrawn his paw. Now he thrust it in again and tried to hook his claws into whatever was in there. Then with a little yelp he withdrew that paw in surprise. Sharp teeth had closed upon the black paw. It hurt and that hurt made Jimmy angry. He would show that Mouse now if it took him all night to get him. Yes, sir, he would have that Mouse in spite of everything. It couldn't be that that hole led to the home of a bear or that Mouse would not have been within reach. Jimmy was sure of that. He was big enough for him to get his head in and get hold of him. That is what he would do.

Perhaps he could even start there was a flash of white from that hole and a set of sharp teeth met in the side of his thumb. It was all for Jimmy that his fur was long so that those teeth should not go through the skin. At the same time a long, slim, small form clung to Jimmy with four short but strong legs. It was so sudden, so wholly unexpected that Jimmy was thrown off balance and in a second they were rolling over and over, snarling, growling, trying in one teeth and claws.

Jimmy succeeded in throwing the other off and managed to get to his feet facing. "I didn't know you were in there, Cousin Shadow, Hadn't known it. Thought I'd have driven you for the world," apologized Jimmy, backing away a little.

Shadow the Weasel, for that is who he was, followed him up, his back arched, his eyes red with rage his lips drawn back to show his needle-sharp teeth. "It is not why a fellow cannot take a nap in peace," he snarled.

"I thought it was a Mouse in there," explained Jimmy.

"Well, you see it wasn't!" snarled Shadow.

Jimmy Skunk was retreating. There was no doubt of that. At the same time he was trying to think through the skin. At the same time he kept one eye on Shadow.

Tariff Concession by France With United States is Possibility Though No Statement Has Been Issued by Cabinet

AMBASSADOR ACQUAINTED WITH ISSUE

De la Boulaye Consults Documents And Experts and is Familiar With United States Background Through Residence

PARIS, March 25 (AP)—France intends to open debt negotiations when the new ambassador to America, Andre Lefevre de la Boulaye, arrives in the United fates, April 12, it was said today.

Action has been delayed until the new ambassador would become thoroughly acquainted with the subject.

A government spokesman declined to say whether the government was ready to grant tariff concessions in return for debt revision.

He de la Boulaye has been consulting documents and talking with experts more than a month and has become reasonably familiar with American background through his residence there and interest in the country.

France defaulted last December 15 on a $19,000,000 interest payment on war debts owed the United States. The government of Premier Herriot, who favored payment, fell on the issue. The French parliament is now considering a resolution introduced a week ago by Deputy Rene Richard calling for the payment of the defaulted interest.

Canadian Press Heat

Washington, March 25—(AP)—Cordell Hull, secretary of state said newspapermen today that he could not say at the present time that the United States would discuss war debts with nations which have defaulted.

In answer to queries, the Secretary of State said:

"As to the governments that are in default or have not made their payments on the inter-government debts, I decided say at the present time that we would sit in with those governments in future discussions of these debts."

The statement was made only a short time after Ambassador Claudel had been made in Paris that the new French ambassador would begin discussions of war debts immediately on his arrival April 12.

HIGH TARIFFS ARE DEPLORED

Woollen Merchants Blame Restrictions For Low Ebb

(By Thos. T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 25 (CP Cable)—The Federation of Woollen Manufacturers and Shippers of Great Britain and Ireland submitted to the Board of Trade a memorandum setting forth the difficulties which the high grade woollen and worsted and worsted trade encounters in the export market as a result of the prevailing tariff restrictions throughout the world.

It shows that whereas the volume of shipments was as great in 1929 and in 1913, it fell by 50 per cent between 1929 and 1932. The memorandum outlines that the principal countries of the world (whose letters accompany the memorandum) declare that British high grade woollen and worsted goods are necessary for the well being most of their business.

France declared that the average increase in the duties imposed by her during the period between 1913 and 1932 was 179 per cent for woollen fabrics and 300 per cent for woollen knitted goods, threads of silk for decorative purposes.

4-YEAR PLAN OF SALVATION GERMAN FARMS

Hitler Will Adjust Whole Problem of Eastern Jews

OIL MONOPOLY

Forced Manual Labor to Wipe Out German Class Divisions

Berlin, March 25—(AP)—Chancellor Adolf Hitler will take action to adjust the whole problem of eastern Jews, it was learned today war persecutions in Poland, Hungary, Russia and other eastern nations who have been most objectionable by Nazis for present distressing conditions in Germany.

Close upon this statement from an official source, Berlin came a Wolff (German)-News Agency dispatch stating that eastern Jews are to be settled on German farms. First suppressive measures against these Jews were made Thursday in the Palatinate, a state on the western frontier, when they were forbidden to withdraw bank and postal accounts.

Profits were kept busy yesterday in Halle, a city in Prussian Saxony, distributing pamphlets urging boycott of large Jewish stores and a new Nazi Oil Monopoly.

Meanwhile Chancellor Hitler has made his first move to carry out his four-year plan for the "salvation" of the German, announced in a speech early in February shortly after his rise to power. The government has created a monopoly of oils and fats, effective next Wednesday.

Hitler also has promised a four year plan for the workers and has announced this would take the form of a gigantic public works plan which would wipe out class divisions. Dr. Hermann Goering, minister without portfolio in the Hitler Cabinet, had a long private conference with Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, representative in Berlin, Monsignor Cesare Orsenigo, the Italian Ambassador arranged the meeting and later join in the conversations.

Hitler and Yahoos.

This followed close upon Hitler's speech in the Reichstag pleading for amicable relations with the Vatican. Hitler declared that he had made an effort to prevail upon German Catholics to abandon the Centre Party's legally hostile attitude toward the Nazis.

The Catholic Centrists, the only large opposition party campaigning against the Nazis in the recent election after general suppression of Communists, Socialists, Democrats and meetings, joined the Nazis in voting for Chancellor Hitler's enabling act giving Chancellor Hitler dictatorial powers.

Conservatives from Berlin that any irresponsible bolshevism among Hitlerites would be "ruthlessly suppressed" will be dealt with severely and that "peace" and "order" will be established has not yet quieted the fears of Jews in all parts of the world for their racial brethren.

In France, where government leaders have been almost silent since the menacing, a committee has been formed to aid the Jews of Germany. Two thousand persons met in Paris Thursday night and cheered loud night against alleged acts of the Hitler government. Another veterans' 2,000 marchers in a protest parade Thursday in New York City.

Jewish Veterans.

The Jewish war veterans called on posts 28 85 cities in the United States to hold protest meetings as soon as possible thereafter. Circulars here promised to be in a mass meeting Monday night in Madison Square Garden, New York and similar demonstrations are planned next Sunday in Boston, Chicago and other cities in Canada and the United States.

Dispatches from abroad state plans are being carried out for a general boycott against all countries simultaneously on Monday.

113 Million Jobless Robots Blamed for Price Decline, for Hoarding and Disorders

BY VICTOR EUBANK

Associated Press Financial Writer

New York, March 25—(Photo-cracy" says may not be a misnomer to "technocracy," but is at least describes an idea which is being discussed in the heavier thinking circles of New York's financial district.

113 Million Robots Ready

The theory, advanced by Dr. Paul F. Cromwell, prominent Wall Street economist, is:

"If every home power of mechanical energy is able to do the work of ten men, there are harnessed in the United States in this country approximately 420,000,000 robots, "to supervise these robots there were in the world, in 1929, approximately 8,800,000 industrial wage earners. Therefore, each person had under him about 48 mechanical robots.

Every time a worker has been laid off, a robot has been added. Purchasing power has ceased to function. Just how the idle robots had a hand in the property depression and the recent financial crisis is explained by Dr. Cromwell in this way:

"To produce robots and to build factories for their housing has required unprecedented amounts of new long-term capital funds, the interest on which depend upon the productivity of the robots. This money was secured through the sale of stocks and securities, a large portion of which was purchased by the banks and on a still greater portion the banks made loans.

"It was the creation of the employment of 113,000,000 robots that created the very difficult economic situation which gained such headway in the year of the new British proposal for disarmament.

Speaking before the general committee of the world disarmament conference in which the proposal is being considered, Dr. Riddell said the Canadian Government welcomed the plan as constituting a comprehensive and important basis for taking definite decisions as the first step in a world programme of disarmament.

The British proposal, he said, seemed to establish a balance between the armaments of the disarmament ledger by placing the participation the security that would be the result of the conclusion on armament that would be required.

The conference was more than a disarmament conference, in Mr. Riddell's opinion. It had become a conference of international relations which the whole world anxiously watched from day to day.

It was possible to achieve an immediate, tangible agreement along the lines of the British proposal, he added, "a world reduced in armaments, would remove fear and prepare the way for conveyance of the world economic and economic conference."

Typesetters of Vienna Strike Over Censorship

Saturday Morning And Noon Editions Fail to Appear

JOBLESS RIOT

Vienna, March 26—(AP)—Vienna, one famous cafes, homes and publications which are used freely by foreigners, are not to be a respect today of being without Viennese newspapers indefinitely.

Typesetters, pressmen and paper went on strike last night in protest against the Austrian government's censorship of the press. Saturday morning and noon editions failed to appear, but the workers said they would take the matter up with their trade unions to join them.

The Socialist party, which is dominant in Vienna, has issued a manifesto condemning the dictatorship into the city of Austria, and to defend the constitution. The Chancellor, is Rudolf Dollfuss (Catholic) at the head of a coalition cabinet.

Several hundred persons were arrested today and police broke up an attempted march of unemployed into the city of Austria, in sympathy with the striking printers.

All morning and noon editions of newspapers failed to appear, but the typesetters and pressmen were brought out by emergency measures, it was said widely.

Dr. Schneiderman, a number of unemployed persons stormed the Austrian Chancellery, damaging the interior and threw furniture and documents through the windows.

CANADA BACKS BRITISH PLAN OF DISARMING

Dr. W. A. Riddell Welcomes First Step in World Scheme

BALANCE LEDGER

Conference Barometer of World Relations Says Riddell

Geneva, Switzerland, March 25—(CP Cable)—Dr. W. A. Riddell, the Canadian Advisory Officer to the League of Nations today welcomed on behalf of the Dominion the British report of the new British proposal for disarmament.

Speaking before the general committee of the world disarmament conference in which the proposal is being considered, Dr. Riddell said the Canadian Government welcomed the plan as constituting a comprehensive and important basis for taking definite decisions as the first step in a world programme of disarmament.

The British proposal, he said, seemed to establish a balance between the armaments of the disarmament ledger by placing the participation the security that would be the result of the conclusion on armament that would be required.

The conference was more than a disarmament conference, in Mr. Riddell's opinion. It had become a conference of international relations which the whole world anxiously watched from day to day.

It was possible to achieve an immediate, tangible agreement along the lines of the British proposal, he added, "a world reduced in armaments, would remove fear and prepare the way for conveyance of the world economic and economic conference."

Capt. Goering Believes German Masses May React

Berlin, March 26 (AP)—Persecution of any man simply because he is a Jew will not be tolerated, said Captain Hermann Goering, Minister without Portfolio, in an impassioned address today to foreign correspondents in which he pleaded for fairness in estimating the German situation.

He also expressed the opinion that Jews and Socialists abroad "exaggerate" their sufferings, and declared that Germany's friends a poor service by making unfavorable reports on German conditions or by holding protest mass meetings.

"Every German" he said, "smiles when he learns that on next Monday prayer meetings will be held in America."

Death Penalties For Violence.

While admitting excesses during the first days of the German revolution, he claimed the government had adopted most stringent measures to check them, including death penalties, for further transgressions.

"The revolution committed during the first days of the National revolution," he said, "must be attributed to provocations in brown shirts. The brown shirt is a part of the formation of the Nazi party.

"There is not one person in all Germany from whom even one hair's gremall has been chopped off," the Minister declared.

"I will not ever stand for persecuting a man simply because he is a Jew."

He was visibly nettled over hostility in the foreign press concerning the up in a part of the world press. Such propaganda, he said, "Could be declared war in Germany." the Minister continued, may result in the German masses reacting themselves to in a different manner from what the propagandists desire."

"What we are doing domestically is our affair and there is no other reason for protesting abroad than a desire for holding forward campaigns in Germany against, for instance, France's employment of black soldiers."

Mystery veils the ownership of the small fishing shanty which has been left deserted on the ice in the bay near the cut, just south of Nelson's coal yard. Tribune Pays Appreciation to Former Thurlow Man

C. C. Avard, manager of the Belleville Tribune, New Brunswick, in a short sketch in that publication, pays some little known eulogists on the nature of Mr. Henry R. Ross, manager of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, and formerly well known in this city, whose birthplace was Thurlow Township, just west of Corbyville.

His father was the late Philander Ross, who died in this city some ten years ago, one of the best known residents of Thurlow. A brother-in-law, of Mr. Ross, Mr. Chas. Meyers, is present Chief of Police on Dundas Road, some distance west of this city.

Distinction was won by Mr. H. Ad-

R. Ross, soon after he graduated from the local high school, to enter the Ontario Agricultural College. From there he accepted the position of editor on the New Brunswick Transcript.

Later he accepted the important position as manager of the New Brunswick Cold Storage Plant, which he still fills.

He is a man of much more than ordinary ability, was the manner in which Mr. C. C. Avard summed up the interesting life in the office.

The cold storage plant of which Mr. Spencer Belleville man is in charge is believed to be one or the largest, if not the largest, in Can-

Count Nicholas Ignatieff Tells of the New Russia

Ways in which Canada justifies the expectations of the newcomers and how she disappoints the new Canadian, as explained by the citizens of the future, was the theme of a thought-provoking address by Count Nicholas Ignatieff to the Liberal students at a large meeting of the Women's Canadian Club, held in the Alma St. Collegiate Library. Count Nicholas, the son of a Russian ambassador, was noted educationist, who was drawn to Canada by the fact that opportunities offered a young man with ambitions in engineering entered into Canada's development more than seen ostensibly as a berry-picker. Contact in the rural and manufacturing district with Canadians new and old, he declared, had brought out the difficulties that confront the newcomer, and the government is the center of adjustment and assimilation, giving his words the value of personal experience.

Many Questions Answered

Many of the questions Liberalians have in Russia of today was evidenced by the many asked of the speaker, when he offered to answer queries. Count Nicholas was introduced by Mrs. R. R. Logie, president of the club.

"It isn't sufficient to say to the new Canadian, 'forget your old ways and become Canadian'," said the speaker, "Something more positive could be done besides helping newcomers up as good citizens."

Built up on the principles of the British empire, which offers a civilization superior in humaneness and tolerance to many European countries, Count Nicholas said, Canada has a definite tradition to offer new Canadians, a young tradition, perhaps which should not be regarded as inferior. To Count Nicholas, Canada's tradition was built upon the peace and pioneering and this tradition is preserved in the new Canadian in school books and films which help him realize that Canadians endured great hardships in early days and that he must not expect things will be easy.

The contribution a newcomer is expected to make to Canada is primarily, that of building up the country as well as settling and developing the land. Pioneers built up Canada as a land, founding big cities, building railways and reaching south as a land of living, that is now impossible for Canadians to go back to the land. Thus the new Canadian is invited here solely for the purpose of farming and therefore meeting appeal and disappointments, Count Nicholas said the spirit of Canada, the beauty of the St. Lawrence district and Alexandra Trumbull had just had the satisfaction of hearing herself voted the most popular girl in the group at Sandra Hardie's bridge.

The honour had come upon her unclothed without warning. She had been only haughtily amused by the proceedings. Her own way, had been cast, without her knowledge, for Hilda Myra Byrnes, who was in love with somebody and always appeared to have been wanting. The contest, by decision, was Hilda's by two votes.

But, when Sandra thought everyone else in the office took the unlucky girl in good part, and nothing else was discussed for many succeeding days. Girls reflected and giggled and structured, filling the long breaks when the social backbiting was slack.

"It me, Myra?" "Is she tidy?" "Is she pretty?" "Is she dressy?" "Is she clean?" "Does she use good English?" "Is she fond of cooking?" "Does she read books, music, cards, games?" "What other qualities? Does she harmonize with her think of her?"

Only Alexandra Trumbull had remained on her mood neighbour.

"I don't think it's supposed to have anything to do with us," she told Laura Files had answered primly.

When her own name, as called, obviously, he had much. From him she had experienced an unbelievably unsettling almost to vertigo. It had been simply dizzy from her head to come forward from the assembled group in the main office.

She had been alone in her neat dressy silence, only now and then lighting a cigarette, straight ash eyes to the earnest face of old Hartley, who was transacting his about efficiency and organization spirit.

had made her feel humbled and ashamed.

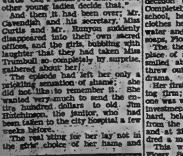
Oh, no—no it! she had stammered in all honesty. All the speakers kindly would had come to her with "Thanks, Alexandra," eagerness to help any one in trouble, kindness, efficiency.

"Oh, no, truly—" she had protested. Then crushed forward by generous hands somehow, to the front of the room, to take the tasseled, handsome face of Carter Cavendish. Her heart began to beat fast.

"Congratulations!" he had said. Her own hand felt the grip of his big fingers, and with his left hand he had tendered her the little box or flowers and the slip of an envelope. Inside, a hundred dollars, and tickets, and the girls shrieked their delight. Alexandra had no the flowers.

"Here, don't look, that check!" Carter had said, laughing, as it fell, and with a swift movement he had snatched it.

"I shouldn't have it, Mr. Cavendish," Sandra had declared to protest calmly, even though his voice had sounded scarcely real, dizzily, it did make any difference to him. His wife bowed a few stiff, indifferent murmurs and a few quite indifferent words "Oh, I think you must let the other people have a chance, Carter."



And then it had been over; Mr. Cavendish had gone, Sandra and Curtis and Mr. Runyon suddenly absorbed in the business of the office, and the girls, bubbling with laughter and excited chatter, with Trumbull so completely by surprise, gathered about her.

The shock had left her only a prickling sensation of shame; she did not think to remember that she wanted very much to send the only hundred dollars to Aunt Hutchinson, the janitor, who had been ailing in the city hospital a few weeks before.

The very thing for her lay not in the girls' choice of her hands and Carter Cavendish! What had he ever done to be so handsome, so rich, so successful, so kindly, approving and superior?

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION SCHEME

Agriculturists are watching to see what effect the Federal Agricultural Stabilization Fund will have in bringing some compensation for the losses which have resulted to Canadian agriculture through the disparity between the Canadian dollar and the British pound and from exchange fluctuations. This was one of the surprises of the Ottawa Trade Pact.

The scheme establishes a fund wherefrom exporters of Canadian commodities to the British market will be given the difference between the price actually received and the price on the basis of the valuation of the pound at $4.60. This is evidently a splitting of the loss which the difference in exchange has meant to the agriculturist. The burden on the country will amount to a large sum of money. It is estimated, but it is felt that it will help the exporter with the promise of a fixed return and bring probably improvement in the prices paid by the consumer for the commodities agreed upon, which do not include grain.

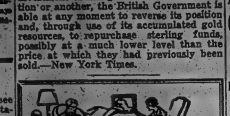
The scheme is going to be put to the test under the Rhodes budget and the future will tell of its success.

It is hoped by that it will prove of benefit to the producers. That not the middlemen but the farmers and other producers will reap the benefit is the intention of the measure.

A WEEK OF BUDGETS

Though budgets give a rather bewildering effect especially when two of them are opposed in the same week, though the people as represented by investors and speculators seem to be in some doubt, the very ebb and flow of movements on exchanges in the minds of men and women indicates that there is at last a realization that momentous days are at hand which will lead to a revival. There is a revival. They are also realizing that debts of all kinds play no small part in the present situations. And they worry what lies ahead. These are truly momentous days and if hope should fall away a little for a moment it is not to be wondered at for neither is optimism in the long run to be wondered at.

Canada's institutions are standing strong after the raids of four years of pessimism and assaults from all quarters of the world. This is something for which the people are thankful.



A new earnestness has come. There is an evident intention to face the facts boldly and courageously. Governments and municipalities as well as those of individuals are under fire. The high cost of government, such as has climbed in the United States to about 30 per cent. of all the taxes, is something which is making people come to face the cold facts of the poverty which debts bring.

BANK OF ENGLAND'S GOLD

Among the many extraordinary phenomena of the present depression attention the recent piling up of gold in the Bank of England has not been the least remarkable. Four months ago when the British Government paid the large instalment on the war debt and the Bank's gold holdings were drawn upon for that purpose, their total decreased to the figure of £19,600,000. In the middle of January a return movement began which soon reached large proportions. Yesterday's statement showed that in the ten weeks since that date the Bank of England's stock of gold has increased about £50,000,000. It is true that the actual payment stock of gold in the Bank of England is not only greater by some $146,000,000 than in the week preceding the January payment was made, but that it has never been exceeded in the Bank's history, save for a three months' period in 1926.

The unusual influx of gold to the London depository seems to have been attributable partly to transfer of capital, during the period preceding the moratorium, from the United States to England, but it has also, and more particularly, resulted from sales of sterling bills by the British Government to prevent or retard the rise in the rate for sterling. The proceeds of such sales on the exchange market, being in the form of francs or dollars, were converted into gold balances at Paris and New York and were in due course covered into gold at the England's holdings. Thus the paradoxical result has been that a country which was endeavouring to import gold to relieve the international value of its currency was at the same moment witnessing an all but unprecedented flow of gold into its own markets from other countries.

From one point of view, this building up of the Bank of England's gold position might be regarded as immensely costly, for the sale of sterling exchange and its conversion into gold implies the paying of a premium ranging from 40 to 60 per cent. above the former statutory price of gold bullion. But the operation has been peculiar. In so far as the government had a hand in it, the conversion was effected through the so-called "exchange equalization fund," which has been estimated to amount to £175,000,000. Controlling the investment of this great fund in one direction or another, the British Government is able at any moment to reverse its position and, through use of its accumulated gold resources, to repurchase sterling funds, possibly at a much lower level than the price at which they had previously been sold.—New York Times.

ODDITIES IN THE NEWS are always interesting. Associated Press tells us that "The Winsted Line" is the name given to the main street of Winsted, Conn., whose fertile brain hatched such grotesque, interesting and appealing characters as Winsted's famous quartet, all to pay wire tolls and space rates to get them, and newspapers put them on the Front Page. Lou Stone put Winsted on the map and a grateful country revered his honor public memorials at each entrance to the town. Winsted is a picturesque Connecticut community nestled in the Litchfield Hills, and is a tale of three sections, East Winsted, West Winsted and The Flat, the town is strung out in one long principal street with side streets branching off, from the hill at one side of the town to the rising ground on the other, with the low-lying valley between called the Flat, incidentally the business section. Above the hills on each side of the town are ridges and the valley races a river, which supplies power to many factories. These factories employ many girls and the feminine population is considerably greater in numbers the male persuasion, hence eligible young men are always at a premium, and can they have a time! Oh, Boy! Lou Stone's racy news despatches of the town's doings over a period of a dozen years Winsted may well be designated as "30" to the writings of a newspaper man who broke out of the easy sill of routine and became different, so different as to become a national character:

WINSTED, Conn., March 26—Mark Twain lived at the mansion in Redding, Connecticut, a few miles from Winsted, not only inventing better frogs, but more of them. The Winsted Sage, who died just a few days ago, made his town famous with his amusing fabrications.

Some of his inventions were the bald man of Winsted, who kept flies off his head by painting a spider on it; the Winsted phonograph, a piece of paper into a typewriter and printed the alphabet backward; the cow which gave ice cream on Winter's coldest days, and the hen which, because of a bare lip, whistled "Yankee Doodle."

The list could be prolonged endlessly, for in more than 40 years of newspaper work Stone poured forth the most amazing stream of fabrications that, although nobody believed. His home town thought so much of the advertising service he had done that Winsted's Chamber of Commerce at the main entrance of Winsted a large sign:

WINSTED, FOUNDED IN 1776, HAS BEEN PUT ON THE MAP BY LOU STONE AND HIS AMUSING STORIES THAT HAVE EMANATED FROM THIS TOWN AND WHICH HAVE BEEN PRINTED ALL OVER THE COUNTRY. THANKS TO L. T. STONE."

The chief of the nature fakers was born in Winsted on October 19, 1875, and lived there all his life, also all his working life, with a brief exception, was passed on the Evening Citizen, and he refused a number of tempting offers to devote his talents to staff work on larger papers.

Perhaps his most famous story was that of the Winsted baseball team. Stone was manager when it started because he wanted $150. Unfortunately for him financially, it was too good. Out-of-town papers sent staff men, the baseball writers among them, to write articles. The staff reporters and photographers hunted the wildman through a good part of the summer of 1926, and might have been after him yet if they had not been vanished. He wrote of a cow, once owned by two old maids, which was so modest that it wouldn't give milk for the new male owner. There was also a bulldog, that sat on a batch of eggs for three weeks after a hen had become discouraged. To him was attributed what was put forth as a Winsted schoolboy's definition of a skeleton: "A man whose insides are out and whose outsides are gone."

PSYCHOPATHIC CASES SHOULD BE RESIGNED

Mentally Unbalanced May be Potential Criminals

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Psychology

Every now and again the country is stirred to its very depths by the perpetration of a heinous crime. And then, of course, nothing but the offender must not been appreciated—guesses are rife as to what sort of twisted mind could possibly commit such an awful deed.

Unfortunately, however, as the criminologists go by most people resign to their usual mood of complacence and think the crime the criminal are practically, forgotten until—and this inevitably happens—another blood-curdling act of violence startles the country and the public.

Although I am not trying to prove that all criminal acts against the person, or even all murderous ones, are the result of abnormal unbalanced individuals, there is no gainsaying the fact that they often are.

For surely there are scores of insane as well as mentally defective individuals roaming about in society who have not been confined in institutions; and just so long as such individuals, however, are potentially antisocial at least because of their mental condition, they should not be allowed free rein one may confidently expect further criminal assaults, even of the most revolting nature.

Particularly is this true about a certain type of mentally abnormal known as Constitutional Psychopathic State. Individuals belonging to such patients are merely called Psychopaths.

A psychopath is not insane, nor is he feeble-minded. Indeed, he may have considerable intelligence, often above average. Cases of psychopaths that have been described in the literature run on record. But what such a psychopath lacks—and this is to be sure, is often makes him so dangerous—is normal and usual emotional response.

In others words, whereas a person with a normal emotional response would responds with gladness or sadness to an occurrence or piece of news that should give him glad or sad, a psychopath may respond in an opposite manner, or may simply be feeling whatsoever.

The same holds true for other emotions, such as kindness, love, pity or sympathy. Such a person is abstract concepts as justice, honor, charity or patriotism. And that is why a psychopath, capable of committing a most atrocious crime, may do so in the most callous and cold-blooded manner possible, without any remorse or any concern of the hand or the quickening of a heart beat.

Every psychopath is not a criminal, either actually or in the making. Yet, if he is, he is a most dangerous criminal or rebellious tendencies, like intelligence, but unfortunately his adequacies makes for a personality that can conceive anything from a child of mischief and is absolutely without fear of consequences.

But although the courts of law do not recognize the psychopath as such, he can be dealt with according to the statute books a psychopath is a menace to society as feeble-minded. Therefore psychopaths are treated as are ordinary criminals. And if they are confined they get time off for good behavior. Psychopaths, however, do not get out again, although they are often so pathological as before.

For psychopaths are incurable. Where criminal psychopaths belong, and for this purpose specially designed institutions specially devised for them.

MAXEY UNDISPUTED LIGHT HEAVYWEIGHT

Slaps Down N.B.A. Nominee Bob Godwin in 4 Rounds

New York, March 23 (AP)—The Maxey boom no one has been silent since it started, Slapsy Maxey Rosenbloom, held undisputed possession of the world's light heavyweight championship today.

Recognized as world's title-holder by the New York State Athletic Commission since 1927, Rosenbloom settled all disputes over the 175-pound division by flattening Bobo Godwin, the fourth round of a 15-round bout.

These for the first time since Tommy Loughran relinquished the title to battle the heavyweight in 1929. The light heavyweight throne is in the hands of a nationally recognized owner.

A slim crowd of 9,000 saw the Maxleen night club king floor Godwin twice in the first round, sag and cuff him around in the second and third, and end it in the fourth about the eye that referee Pete Hartley called out at 2 minutes and one minute, 18 seconds of the fourth session.

THE BRONZE BUTTON—

A reader wonders just how many school children of this city could tell you what that little bronze button which adorns the left coat lapel of the returned soldiers you see walking the streets means or represents. It is round in design, enamel in color and even uninteresting looking that little button actually is little attention it those who pass. Each year it appears to represent less and less, although its depreciation is sadly marked. Often it is worn by old soldiers, but many a boy who has not completed the sale of another dozen of gross of the pencils he had sold right in the city.

Possibly another year, he returned when the button will be known by that we are selling them at the office for 5 cents and the repeaters—those dyed-in-the-wool boys who have sold a dozen week or oftener the manufacturer can thank for his business right here, it was explained.

ANIMATED MOUSE TRAP —

Selective breeding of cats to catch rats in the opinion of one downtown merchant who has tried it is the only way to combat the threat of the rodents which are said to be in some fine night. The latest addition to the alley cat he picked up at the rear of his store. Nothing is to say other selected rat catchers in the city, but he's bred an animal that is a cross between a terrier and a small wild cat. The rear of his store is guarded night and day as are big and fierce, but when Pete goes up the alley he is the only person in the city who can approach the fierce animal without getting a right from each end of the fighting machine. Pete has stated as many as twenty-five in a night, some of them equalling the dead bodies in a little row by the side of the door each morning. He pays for his keep.

Interesting Letter Received From Schoolgirl in Cape Province

Tweed—The special service being conducted in the United Church during the week by Rev. R. B. Reynolds, assisted by Rev. R. R. Nicholson, continued to draw considerable crowds. Wednesday evening the pastor spoke on theme "What Kind of Christian Are You?" Thursday evening should provoke serious thought on the part of all those who heard it. Mrs. W. A. Beatty sang with expression "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer."

Serious times shone on the face we sustained for Mr. P. Rasbotte as the Rasbotte Bros. Bash and Door factory on Wednesday afternoon when he was struck by pieces of wood blown from a kilne which he was operating.

Mr. and Mrs. Orson Langevin who were married a short time ago were presented with a beautiful mantel clock by the staff of the Tweed factory, or which the former is an employee, at their home Friday evening. A short address was read by Mr. R. A. Reynolds and Mr. A. Palmisano made the presentation. The evening was spent in playing cards the while which refreshments served by the ladies who had gathered.

Letters have been received from the section of California recently suffering from severe earthquakes by C. H. Garrett and Mr. J. C. Pratt. Mr. Garrett's sister, Miss Myrtle Garrett, who is employed in the office of the British Consul General at Los Angeles described the thrilling experience. February 20, 1933

Dear Joan:

I suppose you will be surprised to get a letter from me as you don't know about me, but anyway I am Cousin Erasmus, showed me the snapshots of you and your class, and so I decided to write you as I have always longed to have a pen friend in Canada.

I am four feet, ten inches tall, and have blue eyes and fair hair. I am eleven years of age and am in Standard IV. My birthday is on July, 14th. There are eight children in our family, counting me. I am the second youngest, and the youngest is Nancy.

I am in Standard IV. My other sisters and brothers are Gertrude, Ethel, Dorothy, Estelle (now Mrs. De Klerk); Cornelius, Johannes and Jack. Our sister Nancy and I are the only children who are still at school.

I will now tell you about our school. It is a small school, there are only about seven any 30 children in the school, 11 boys and 18 girls. We have a nice school house and the girls tenicott. We also have a school concert because it is not finished yet, but we play on the verandah instead. We have the crown each for a whole year. We do not play any games, but we do not play on all of it. We have a nice garden, especially in May time,

Trenton "Imperials" Meet Cities Service in Playoff for the Robertson Trophy

Tie Campbellford 2 - 2 Which Assures Them of Second Place

Knock Off Their First Game in Loop Defeating Frankford

Playing the Campbellford Maroons to a 2 to 2 tie, the Trenton "Imperials" qualified to meet the Belleville Cities Service in the final playoffs in the Belleville and District League at the Arena on Friday night which game the Imperials won their initial game in the "3" series defeating the Campbellford "Millers" by the score of 4 to 2, in the curtain-raising game of the evening.

The senior game between the Maroons and the "Imperials" proved to be 600 odd fans present to be one of the fastest and hardest fought games of the season with the Trenton outfit presenting a formidable line of offence and defence. Ken Chambers, in the nets for the "Imperials" was outstanding and upheld all evening with Whitton's two counters being the only goals scored against him, Chambers was more than ably assisted by Jack Bowman at York, the latter playing the last half of the game with an injured leg. The front line of Fillion flanked by Bohan and Begin saw the latter named leading the line of this trio. The alternate line of Johnson flanked by Pat Devlin and Powers proved to be the goal getters for their club and worked a better combination of combines than their team mates with the ultimate result, that their scoring line proved quite prolific throughout.

Whitton Scores Game

Manager Ferris of the Maroons passed Chester Whitton a vote of appreciation for his service for the all-important game but even with this added incentive, the Maroons could not muster the much needed scoring punch to overcome that of the "Imperials", who incidentally were never headed throughout. Whitton, returned to the game to play his usual dashing daring game and soon got his team mates working on solo strategy. Fred Ingram and Davis Bowman, the latter a Trenton star, while Bush and Hendy excelled in combination for the subs. Messrs. Arthur and H. Ingram again thwarted many efforts of the Trenton forwards.

On the playoff combination play will soon be the local stream, the season Johnson scored the initial goal on Jim Denis' counter at 2.30. These two players combined the length of the ice before Johnson found his scored the equaliser with but four minutes of play left in the first stanza. Whitton opened the scoring in the second frame on a pretty solo effort at 5.30 and Chester Whitton wiggled through the entire Trenton team to top off his night in a little later. No score was registered in the final period although the Maroons looked forward a fine rear attack.

The Line-ups

Campbellford—Goal, Hollis; defence Ingram, Bowman; centre, Denis; wings McKay and F. Ingram; subs Whitton, Copperwaithe, Hendy and Davis.

Trenton—Goal Chambers; defence Bowman and Begin; centre Johnson; wings Bohan and Begin; subs Johnson, Bowman, Devlin.

SECOND GAME

Minus the services of their two hefty defencemen, Bill and Charlie O'Malley, the Frankford "Millers" bowed to the Tweed "All Stars" by the score of 4 to 2 in the second game. For the winning team Grose looked like one of last year players while the front line of Gerald, McGuire and O. Gerald were far too experienced for the youthful "Millers". Earl Fox in the "Millers" goal, was by far the pick of the players on the ice as he thwarted many dangerous attacks through-out. Ackers, Hunt and Finnigan looked the best of the forwards but loosed over the boards by Manager Finnigan.

Quinn scored in the first minute of play on a pass from McGuire. To even this the second period Ackers and Wallace combined the length of the ice to have the puck travel across to lose up the score. From then on the Tweed club showed their superiority and Manager Grose raced the length of the ice to put his team in the lead. F. Gerald made it 3 to 1 on Quinn's pass, while O. Gerald scored in the last period of play when Moreau laid the puck on his stick in front of Millers' cage. Ackers and Wallace combined nicely to score for the losers as the final bell sounded. Three games on one night are slated for Monday night at the Arena.

The Line-Ups

Tweed—Goal Mosier; defence, Lapantina and Quinn; centre, Gerald; wings, O. Gerald and McGuire; subs, Rathbun, Gerald, Grose and Moreau.

Frankford—Goal Fox; defence, Wallace and Ackers; centre, Hunt; wings O. Fraser and Finnigan; subs, Fraser, Bell and Quinn.

Toronto, March 25 (CP)—Opposition marksmen were held scoreless in 58 games by National Hockey League defensive bulwarks in the 1932-33 season, the total of shutouts evenly divided between the two league's two groups.

Twenty-nine times goals the best showing in this respect when they registered shutouts. They also scored at least once except Boston and Montreal Maroons, who were held scoreless in three games. Boston registered shutouts in seven of the league's American section.

Montreal Canadiens of the Canadian group, registered five shutouts with the Chicago Black Hawks, Eddie Shore's of the group, the third place Boston Bruins with four shutouts to their credit. Toronto Maple Leafs, Ottawa Senators and Montreal Maroons each had three shutouts to their credit.

PROBLEM TO FIND PLACES

McCarthy of Yanks Has Good Team Sitting on The Bench

(By Edward J. Neil, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, March 25 (AP)—Joe McCarthy, manager of the world champion New York Yankees, finds but one problem weighing down his broad shoulders as he packs the best baseball club for another season's campaign. Only nine men on the ball field at one time. From Babe Ruth, highest paid player in the field with a salary of $25,000 a year down through Lou Gehrig, Bill Dickey, Lefty Gomez, Tony Lazzeri, Charley Ruffing, Earle Combs and Johnny Allen the set sparkles with baseball's biggest names.

Behind them, relatively on the bench, are Frank Crosetti, veteran old youngsters who might shine even as the veterans get set back in the years when their play regularity was theirs.

No one could ask more than an Babe Ruth, Gehrig, Dickey and the Alabama antelope, in left field; Lazzeri, the peerless second baseman; Crosetti, the shortstop; Gomez, the southpaw; Ruffing, the right-hander; Allen, the right-hander and Combs, the veteran outfielder. Eight members of the World Champion Yankees are on the playing field at one time.

It is to be hoped, that some little encouragement will be offered of the two champion clubs of the Belleville and District League in the Odd with a salary of $25,000 a year, but the most noticeable feature the way the players conducted themselves while on the ice.

In order to make the closing of the Arena, that is for public skating, a night long to be remembered by those who attended the second last night, that skating would be held until 2 o'clock on Tuesday, as Saturday night was Easter Sunday and there has been many new enjoy in the loop while the play-off series should be one long to be remembered in these parts.

WINTER MILD BUT LITTLE LESS FUEL

Although the winter season of 1932-33 has settled into the records as a fairly mild one with few weeks of actual cold weather, fuel dealers of the city failed to reveal any noticeab's drop in sales of their product throughout the winter. Coal fair average has been maintained, according to one prominent dealer.

Janitors and caretakers of many public buildings at various times throughout the season remarked on the scarcity of fuel in their respective plants. Recurrent cold waves, however, it was pointed out, kept the average well up.

One dealer reported a drop in coal sales, but a corresponding increase in wood orders being booked. In his opinion wood burning in the city was being given impetus through the fact that many county buildings had found it advantageous to burn it instead of other fuels.

Quietly Developing Art of Self Defence at Athletic Club

Plenty of Good Timber is Nightly Being Coached

Two keen crouch to opposite corners of an improvised ring. A single electric light suspended above in the middle plays over each fighter. Elbow inches above muscles ripple up and down with every flick of the glove.... Fancy footwork smothers and trashing shows in every line.

"Then" it calls a man who holds a watch. The two pushes step to the centre of the ring, and crouch facing each other. A glowed hand, after a moment of rhythmic bobbing, flicks out to the other's face ....the move is blocked, and another punch starts from the opposite floor in return.....But it doesn't connect.....The fight gets faster.....Gloves fly, and the smack of leather and skin echoes between more distinct.....The shaky floor drums with shifting feet.....Faster grows the pace, and more furious the attempt, block and punch..... One expects a knock-out.....Suddenly it ceases.

"Time" calls the man with the watch again, and the youths retire to their corners to rest after the long minutes.

One of them is Art Angell. The other one of the pair is Ted Boit, are well known boxers in the city, who have often distinguished themselves in the wars abroad, and are now passing their experience on to some of the other youths of the town. The scene is the interior of the building known as the Belleville Athletic Club, formerly the Wharf Street Rowing Club, but since the order of things has taken place, coincident with the changing of the name.

The club has gone in for the manly art of boxing in a big way and plenty of timber has been found among the boys to make boxing conscious, than it has ever been before.

Going On Quietly:

Under Freddy Parry's tutelage many youths of the city, who have seldom ventured in the ring with gloves, have stepped up into the ranks of the fistic fraternity, and the action to be found in the improvised ring on any night of the week in the cramped quarters. Some of the boys have developed to the point where they show credit and at the smaller professional boxing clubs in the city, should they care to, could go quickly during the past few months have developed in the course of their activities.

Friday night saw the usual turn-out of boys, Parry boxed Angell, as he usually does. The boys don't mind getting a few bumps around. When the gobs gets rough they take a sort of keen delight in attempting to shift each other's features around a bit.

"All good clean fun", remarks manager Jos Semain, from the sidelines.

Ralph Collins and Cecil "Jack" Parry mixed it in the ring, both padded gloves. Both shifty lads, Parry and Collins. Manager Harold Morris stands on the sidelines. Gordie has become so fast and handy that the boys have to look for someone who can keep with him. Angell and Parry are two boys who can stand the pace.

George Mahon, welcomer to the ranks has an awkward left and a funny style. But he troubles a few of the boys with it, as his trainer advises Parry from the side. Minto Tweddle, Imperial Oil employee, claims cat victory over Jay Farrell. Jay Campbell Marmora despite the fact, that Friday night's game ended in a 3 all tie. The boys from the Marmora Power and Hastings County are playing heads on hockey here this week with Ken Chambers tending the best game of his rubber versatile career.

Even the return of Buster Whitten and Lloyd Copperthwaite assists in keeping alive the title of Belville although Whitten goes to the Arena at Marcon to register on the scoring sheet for the Hydro Town stars, while Lloyd is with the Harry Ingram at a much better advantage, practically this season, this also goes to Ken Davis. Perhaps Doc Jones will succeed in back checking introduced by the "Imperials" had something to do with the latter's improved showing. The second place Trentonians will be seen in action later than they saw safety in the loop while the play-off series should be one long to be remembered in these parts.

GOALIES ARE HARD TO BEAT IN PLAYOFFS

Fort William and Saskatoon in Tie Game

Toronto, March 25 (CP)—Agile goalies of the remaining teams in the National Hockey League playdowns are hogging the show as they accomplish se' the number of scoreless periods in the series thus far.

As Saskatoon last night, Gordie Hampsall, cornerman for the "Thunderbirds" and Lorne "Gabby" Kirkpatrick, Coast defenceman, Wood, guarding the Fort William net, Mckenzie Quakers dominated the game, when their defence played in a 3-3 deadlock, giving the Montrealers the odd game.

The scoring game will be played at Fort William, Saturday, and Trail Smoke Eaters are marking time, until the Coast finish in Toronto Vancouver. April 2 and 4, in the Western Canada final.

Pre-Game Comment as N. H. L. Teams Take Ice

Toronto, March 25 (CP)—Undaunted by the loss of proved men through the draft, Irvin was in Boston today with his revised champion Toronto Maple Leafs prepared to defend the title and Lester Patrick was in New York tonight in the first of a two-game series for the league championship.

Con Hastmer, former Maple Leaf amateur now playing with Syracuse, will be in the nets for the former of the team without playoff experience. Hastmer replaces Lorne Chabot, who was drafted by Chicago Black Hawks.

Sands will hold down the right wing place left vacant by Joe Ballaff, out with injuries. Thoms and Dorsty were moved up from Syracuse to fill the defence gaps entering for the seventh consecutive season.

Burke are both nursing injuries, but will be in the game as will Harold Cotton and possibly Red Horner of the Leafs. Both of whom are nursing hand injuries.

Detroit Red Wings swirl into action against Montreal Maroons who are trying hard to overcome the Montreal tonight in the first of a two game round Stanley Cup eliminations.

Both have young, speedy forwards capable of scoring many points in one or thirty three front lines. They will probably have a light drift to-ward the nets as the game opens.

Opponents for the National Hockey League title of last year Rangers and Montreal Canadiens, New York Sunday night in the first of a two game series for the league championship.

Both clubs are strong in defence, the rival managers expressed confidence in the outcome.

Lester Patrick optimist "Rangers will start this night in the best condition they ever entered any playoff matches. From Andy Aitkenhead out we expect to win."

Leo Dandurand announced the Canadiens in good shape and Joe Cattalo we will beat the Rangers Monday night. Both managers entering for the seventh consecutive season.

The drama, whose theme is the effect of world events in the home and family, is based on the life of a greatest writers in the English language, Noel Coward, known for his successes enjoys the distinction of having his play run for a solid year at the Drury Lane Theatre in London.

A staff of experts was sent from Hollywood to see the play and to photograph it for reference. Another large staff was put to work on the research necessary to write a story that covers the colorful period, from 1899 to the end of the present year. Seven years in the making, the picture is said to be the most elaborate, expensive and historical production ever filmed.

More than six months of preparation and a staff that numbered 200 preceded the actual start of production. Capable of being vividly, distinguished. Wide Must for Actors

Hollywood's New York and London were scoured for the best actors and actresses available for interpretive acting and experience to interpret the 40 principal roles. From a number of the original Drury Lane cast were brought from London to reenact their parts before the camera, and two other London favorites were signed for leading roles.

A nine-week shooting schedule was arranged, one of the longest in Hollywood history since the screen has been sound.

In addition to the large cast of principals, thousands of extras were found employment in the colorful sequences which include a number of Trafalgar Square and Boer War scenes and a graphic presentation of a London celebration on New Year's Eve.

The story of "Cavalcade" is the story of the Marryot family, Robert; their two sons, Joe and Robert; and their servants, Ellen, Bridge and Alfred. Bridge's family. While it is etched on a background of historical events of the last 33 years, the story itself is the private life of the Marryot family, its joys, its sorrows, its lovers and its lovers' uppermost. Its theme is universal.

Motion pictures often have been the butt of jokes for the lack of such technical faults. That is, writers have found fault with the way certain flying incidents have been photographed. Recently these complications were performed incorrectly, lawyers have complained that the rules of evidence sometimes have not followed.

Director's one director who doesn't believe in letting these fault finders interfere with the way he sets his films. He has a system which eliminates this very thing—personal research.

Before ever he began production of the film, Hugh Herbert spent 10 days at the United Airport in Hollywood, Burbank, and the field interviewing executives, fliers and aircraft engineers, to learn all the various situations they planned for the picture, and how they operated.

Evelyn Knapp, James Murray and Sabrina Todd have principal roles in the picture which is now on the screen by Keene Thompson and Ralph Graves.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Coon, Frankford, Mark 50th Wedding Anniversary

Presented With Gifts by Friends in The Community

On Wednesday, March 8th, 1933, Mr. and Mrs. David Coon celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, at their home, and were the residents of many congratulations from relatives and friends.

The happy couple were married fifty years ago at the home of Mrs. Coon's relatives in Oxford County, and Rev. Mr. Fowler tied the knot. After the marriage, Mrs. Coon (then Miss Sarah Bell) was presented in teaching school in this township. Immediately after their marriage they took up their residence on the groom's farm in the Fourth Concession of Sidney, here they spent their whole married life until their retirement and removal to the village of Frankford a few years ago, leaving the actual duties of the farm to their son, William.

This identical farm has been in the possession of the same family for the past three generations, Mr. Coon's grandparents who were the United Empire Loyalists, having settled there.

Congratulatory messages were received from their daughter, Mrs. (Rev.) Chapman of Marshall, Michigan, also from an adopted daughter of Hillside, Michigan, as well as messages from many others of relatives and friends.

The day was spent quietly at their home. All other Mr. and Mrs. Coon's children, also Wilbur and Mrs. Coon's brother, Wilbur Bell, and few other old neighbors and friends were invited to tea.

The tea hour over, the happy couple and their friends had first settled down for a social evening and a review of many other days when a very unexpected pretty was made by some thirty of the old friends and neighbors of the Fourth Concession of Sidney—a complete surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Coon.

After the exchange of greetings, the Main Purpose of the gathering was disclosed. The meeting was brought to order by Mr. F. Bell, who acted as chairman. Rev. Mr. Long was called on for the presentation of the address, which in this case was of a very unusual and unique nature, being composed by Mr. Lane, of this special occasion. The address was read by Mr. Lane as the groom, and by Mrs. Lane as the bride, on behalf of the company. On completion of the reading, Mr. and Mrs. Coon were presented with a beautiful bouquet of roses tied with yellow chiffon and bow ties. The address was as follows:

"To Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Coon:

Once in the fair sweet years day below
A good result
Over the hills and the news began to fall,
Dave in his youth goes forth in search
Of a bride
Sarah to meet—so the scribes relate,
As through the months and years they fared
Each to the other promised to be true.

Then in the year we'll not mention right,
With mutual consent the date they fixed
To tie the knot
Out of the months they chose the fifteenth day
On the eighth of March they vowed
To the deed so done,
And don't their joy, after all the world looked sweet.
They by the person went to be complete.

Now, through the seasons scored by Father Time,
Ever they had experiences sublime,
Children have come to make a home complete,
Now they are old enough there
selves to roam,
And in the days when parents weary
Gladly for them the young ones come and go,

Fifty are the years we number now
Fifty years of wedded life,
Rich is the love that you have kept so true,
Safe is the harbor
Safe they now ring their clear and golden song
And for you the wedding strains we prolong,
Just to let you know we love you both first rate.

Here our hearts and hands we freely give,
These are the thoughts of those under whom you live,
In each good cause where help is needed still,
Under the Church where zeal is needed still.
You do your best His service to fulfill.

So in your home, at school or play,
May peace and joy, good health we pray,
Congratulations is our word to you,
Success crown the gracious years before;
Home to meet this little gift of ours,
May it add treasures like the golden flowers.

Even to-day we bring love's wish of you,
Up from our hearts it swells for evermore
Riches abundant as we face to face,
Pray our Redeemer for His own good grace
Now to be given to this worthy pair,
And with to meet you in the Home-Over-There.

Now to Mrs. Coon, Mr. Coon, too,
Words of cheer and gladness we would bring to you,
Though, the words be feeble, and the meter wrong,
Still to you at twilight comes love's old song.
Chimes low's old sweet song,
Praxford, March 8, 1933.
(Signed) T. B. Barfield, Maurice Mallory.

Very suitable replies were made by both Mr. and Mrs. Coon, after which all joined in singing, "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows."

Short addresses were made by Mr. Lane and other old friends, recalling which grace was sung and a bountiful lunch, provided by the guests, was served.

Among those who were present to the gathering from the old neighborhood, were Mr. and Mrs. Bennett Nicholson, who celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary last December.

Another little but much appreciated surprise came to this much honored couple on the evening preceding their anniversary, when, on behalf of the members of Mrs. Coon's Missionary Society, Mrs. Annie Wandrey, president of the latter, and Mrs. Lane visited their home, and presented them with a very beautifully bound copy of the new United Church Hymnal. Mrs. Coon has been for many years and still is, a most active, diligent and staunch member of the society, an example indeed, for although now of the advanced age of 78, she has not missed a meeting in over three years, and when has been ever ready to render her very efficient and always appreciated services. Both a hall or every branch of church work.

Mr. Coon, although now at the age of eighty, is still hale and hearty, residing at the same homestead in the community and church activities. Mr. Coon with his very keen sense of real good nature has won the honor and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact.

It is the sincerest wish of their many friends that both may be spared to enjoy many another anniversary of this happy consolen.

Daily Care of Toiling Hands

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

Hard work and rough living are entitled to dull rose, no matter how much lipstick and rouge the hard-hold calendar. "Wear rubber gloves when you wash dishes," says the dietitian dust into the knuckles. Have at hand a lotion, tar-freely. At the end of the day, after the manicure with lanolin, coco butter or cocoanut oil, massage the hands and the cuticle soft, detached from the nails.

Elbows are all too often out of sight and out of mind. They get grimy, the flesh coarse and heavy from neglect. Regular scrubbing, a vigorous scrubbing, followed by massage with cocoanut oil and a lukewarm

Soap suds is the most valuable of all cosmetics for the skin, for the hair, and the human hide carries more pores and even more need to use it than the hair does. Skin is the trouble. Now and then a complexion won't take soap, but the layer is a way of getting round the problem. Cream on, wipe off with soft paper, cream again. Dip the washcloth in hot water, then frequently over the face, rinse with cold water and dry with a soft towel.

Knees and ankles are one way joints. Don't forget that when going hard through the housework. The reason why high heels create many ankles is because they cause them to swing from side to side, bending the joint. Then the tendons, muscles. During the Chautauqua audiences more than one time for pronouncing the dance a dangerous exercise. Ankles are shocked out of joint, ankles put completely out of form.

The smart richness is one of soft brown velvet, bring out the pinks and blues and reds and golds that are like the periwinkle. Brown shadows are more popular than ever.

Ears require a film of powder, and powder base is a thin liquid with factory blushes. A pretty ear is a thing of beauty and a joy. These are large generous ones, built upon the model. Little earplugs should be hidden away under kindly side locks, unless by what pressure of fare laws may be.

If a woman must bleach her hair and more females than usual are succumbing to the urge right now, let her not pedal on make-up and by all means shock away the black henna-shampoo. Use a peroxide. Bleaching makes the hair one solid color; hides the streaks and gives the appearance of the skin.

Getting a Line on Eyelines

Crowsfeet, turkey tracks, laughing wrinkles, name them and you can have them. Don't be afraid to name them. They appear sometimes at an incredibly early age, through no fault of the afflicted one. They come as the result of having the blin and the pitmen, showing no partiality whatsoever. They're mean and sneaky, and it is well to be on guard against them. Every girl past the age of twenty should take out an insurance against them by nourishing and toning the eyes and tissues around the eyes so creases won't have to make a needless there. Don't wait for them. Get after them before you've got them. They are on the way, you can be pretty sure of that. Few women of thirty show a smooth, full, unlined skin surface of eye frames.

With every face washing give them a treatment. Hold a warm moist cleansing wash cloth to the eyes after bathing them with clear water. Change to cold. Keep the cloth cold, until you feel chilly, good and goose fleshy. The application should be on the astringent state is what does the business. Little earplugs from their slumbers. Get up, do their chores. The hot and cold applications keep muscles strong; little fibres round the eyes are flexible, need strengthening.

Every night rub eye cream. They keep them now for that purpose. Though if you want to keep your beauty sleep, not to mention limit, your regular linsee cream will serve. Put it on lightly. Don't rub the finger tips above themselves and the eyes. Spread them. Begin on the eyelid close to the nose, go sweeping outward, come back under the eye.

No sense powdering crinkle. They look better when they're misty.

Montreal, March 25 (CP)—A woman in Detroit and a man in Boston were the lucky ones.

Cathryn Schlipsgrotes of 3031 Baldwin Avenue, Detroit, and A. Barr Boston, Mass., each drew Kelvinator Jack in the Canadian Army and Navy Veterans' Sweepstake on the Grand National. Each won $17,607, the Sweepstake committee announced.

The Canadian and six American men large prizes through drawing second, third and fourth tickets. H. Ball of Regina, Saskatchewan, was lucky enough to draw Jockey Odds, fourth place finisher, winning $2,202 and Frank Lowry, of New City, also drew Delaneige, and will receive $1,337.

One lot of men arrived in Verdun, the William Kemp drew the second horse, Reality Bond, and won $4,676. His luck was shared with George Montgomery, Rose Calliou, who drew the same horse to win an equal prize.

The third horse, Sister, was drawn by Robert Cronin, New York and Derby Day, by Mrs. Ethel Rockford, 21. Ruth received $1,337.

For Some Years Kept a General Store at Melrose

Mrs. R. W. Although Mr. Mundell became a centenarian on March 17th, last, he still enjoys excellent health taking one section to be redrafted. Other

BUDGET IS CRITICIZED

J. L. Ralston is Chief Liberal Speaker Against Budget

Ottawa, March 25 (CP)—Members of the House of Commons today concluded the debate on the budget and most productive weeks of the present parliamentary session.

In addition to hearing the budget presented by Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, and beginning the debate on it the House made substantial progress with its legislation.

The controversial relief bill yesterday passed the committee stage and awaits third reading when it may come under the knife.

Two important measures were advanced during the week and some time in progress was made with the estimates.

The annual report of the Canadian National Railways showing a net income deficit of $61,205,818 for 1932 operations is now before the drifting: Canada should drop its defensive attitude and "attack the depression."

He introduced an amendment, which amounts to a want-of-confidence motion, and declares the government's trade employment and tariff policies are bad and objects to the new taxation, which weighs most heavily on "those least able to pay."

The United Farmer and Laborite section of the opposition found a spokesman in C. G. Coote, member for McLeod, who made a plea for agricultural relief, urging a reduction in commodity price level up. If prices were raised to 1926 standards, there would have no difficulty borrowing. A budget balance revenue would flow in from the increased business.

FAMOUS MEN RESURRECTED

Contrast the Good Old Times with the Better News Times

"A HORSE! A HORSE! MY KINGDOM FOR A HORSE!"

Quoth King Richard when he was in a hurry to escape from a battle field which was not going to his liking. Nowadays no one would think of a horse as the speed, it would be a motor car—just like the motor car which speeded His Imperial Highness, Kaiser Wilhelm of Hohenzollern on his way to Holland and oblivion—a horse would not have helped the German Emperor very much in his get-a-way. Hence, it is obvious times have changed—FOR THE BETTER.

"THEY MAKE MY PYRAMIDS LOOK LIKE THIRTY PIASTERS"

That's what King Tut would say if he could come back today and see our modern buildings. And also how he would junk his chariot and buy himself a motor car so that he could take a little jaunt around the pyramids in the cool of the evening and visit his friends. Think what a time Antony and Cleopatra would have had in a modern limousine, gliding along the banks of the Nile and reeling off a century or two when the speed microbe bit them. Shades of Antony and Cleopatra will sigh and say "Times have changed," and indeed they have—FOR THE BETTER.

HOWS THE OLD BUS WORKING?—Perhaps "not so good," needs some parts to put it in good condition, and being the case you will find it to your advantage to have an interview with THE MAN OF MANY PARTS, C. B. Sherry, the proprietor of Belleville Auto Wrecking. Mr. Sherry has assembled a large stock of auto parts which are in excellent condition and from which you may select just the parts you require to fix up the 'old bus' at very moderate cost. Hundreds of motorists have been very pleased in being able to save money in this way—so if your car requires parts of any kind it's wise and thoughtful what 'The Man of Many Parts' can do for you. Tires, cubes, brake lining and car springs are offered at special prices. The machine shop conducted by the Belleville Auto Wreckers is complete and up-to-date in every way and oxy-acetylene welding and general machine shop work is performed promptly and satisfactorily. You will find Mr. Sherry a pleasant and reliable man to deal with. Visit his store rooms and work shop some time — they are situated at 147 Pinnacle Street, a short distance north of Dundas Street. The telephone number is 1460.

HOW WELL DO YOU KNOW BELLEVILLE! — You are living here, chant the praises of "Belleville the Beautiful" like all other Better Belleville Boosters, in tune with the humming of the human-dynamo of the Chamber of Commerce, officers and members, which is keeping the name and fame and advantages of Belleville before the world all the time, so that the inevitable expansion of the British Empire will find this city right in the forefront ready to get first choice of the plums of industry.

Belleville has many points of attraction, but there is one, better known, perhaps, to visitors and tourists, than citizens, the Montrose Dairy on the Trent Road, one of the most modern and complete dairy plants in Canada, or elsewhere. One never tires of gazing at the fine thoroughbred cows, so regal-looking in their splendid health and royal lines of good breeding — also the cleanliness of everything, the spotless white suits of the attendants and the care taken to keep the buildings spick and span and sanitary to the last degree.

Montrose Dairy comprises several large buildings used for various up-to-date dairy purposes, and these are surrounded by a large farm where everything is raised necessary for dairy purposes as well as for general sale. Then there are fruit orchards—in short a model farm.

Visitors are always welcome to Montrose Dairy Farm and the visit always impresses one with the absolute certainty that the milk produced here must necessarily be of the highest class, pure and wholesome, containing all the vitamins possible to produce from thoroughbred, well kept cows which cannot help but be contented.

Picture of a Man

By N. Florence Leech

"You're late to dinner," Jessica said, and she trembled herself. Hadn't something terrible come in. Her self, blond husband home? "The boss and I've had to work late," he said. "Sit down, honey, I've got something to tell you."

"Have you lost your job—again?" she exclaimed, and her voice was shrill.

"It wasn't much," he defended himself, sorely hurt.

She sank down in a chair by the window, while anger and despair poured over her. "I'll tell you," she said, wiping away the carefully built-up effect of self-restraint. "You might have known it would be his fault. He declared, in her voice, and coughs began saying things that had never been heard there before. Both turned red. And then, both became so defiant. Instead, he jumped up from the chair and walked out of the house.

"I'm glad the neighbors at last crossly how I feel," she thought, but her thoughts came and her body refused to stay in one place." So he rebuked, and his legs made his footsteps clear.

Her eyes rest his and the light shone palsied on her lips. For there was something about him...Within forthright hatred. Jessica knew.

"You are taking a frightful chance in marrying him," Vera had warned her. "Nobody can't be happy with a banker; he'll never settle down."

But Jessica had believed that her love would hold him, and that together they would put down roots on her in the soil of home. For a time he had been contented. He loved to sit in a lawn as velvety smooth as his neighbors; and he brought her fun-ny...unless the tighten her mind work about the house. They went to parties and dances, and on Sunday would drive far out in the country and picnic in the wood. But after a year he became restless. He had jobs for a few months then, and talked longingly of travelling in distant places. And now had foolishly unthinkingly, cruel things to him, and driven him away.

The long night finally passed, and the day dragged by. At last, at five, there was a knock at the door. She dressed in his angular sewer. Her breath quickened at the sound.

"Business deal afoot, Delaila is here."

She closed her eyes until the dizziness passed, then she managed to think. "Afoot"; that was the key word. Her husband had abandoned her, and Vera had been right after all. Suddenly pride came to her aid. "I'll tell him I'm not home. I'll tell him I've gone to bed with a headache. I'll tell him anything, but I won't see him."

"I tried to find a good job, or just any job. But still you're a fugee."

"Go on," she prodded.

"So as I was passing by Mr. Thurman, an old classmate of dad's, passed a man in his new Packard. He stopped to talk to me. I followed him to Sabot, Thurman's office. He asked me what I had been doing. Then I told him, and he said he would see what he could do. He called up the bosses and the company, and he landed me a job. I had to have work. Then I may, of course, go back to supply my de—" he grinned, and went wooden-ingly toward the door. "I'm home, Sam, Jessica."

"And just a wanderer!" she interjected. He smiled tartly.

"I went to see Jessica, but to find happiness that I said to travel" he continued, "and I've discovered that happiness is here at home."

She looked at him searchingly. He meant it; he was home to stay. Resolutely, because her eyes were bright, she unlocked her arms and rose. His strong, tanned fingers threw back the lid, and there, on the ivory keyboard, they rested. Then the laughing eyes staring up at him, Jessica knew that she had returned to her, and this time it was her eyes that had changed.

WORKS LOWER BUT RECOVERS

N. Y. Market Spent a Session in Idle Drifting

NEW YORK, March 25.—(AP)—The Stock Market spent most a session of idle drifting today, working somewhat lower for a time, but recovery in the late dealings left the list with fractional losses. The volume for the two-hour session approximated 1,000,000 shares.

A number of such spots appeared for the moment, however, as the issues at American Telephone, General Electric and U. S. Steel. These losses were largely recovered, however, and by the end of the session gains were a fraction.

Declines of a point or more in United Gas, Consolidated Gas, Allied Chemical and Socony Vacuum covered or reduced to minor fractions. There were also losses in some of the "new" issues and the New York banks, still unclassified by set unification steps, finished a little higher.

The day's business statistics included the weekly report of freight carloadings for Class I carriers, indicating a fair come-back after the sharp decline occasioned by the banking holiday. The total gained 18,000 cars over the previous week, reaching 649,713 cars.

PRODUCTION OF MILK TOO HIGH PLAINT

Premium Paid For Milk Over 3.5 Per Cent Butter Fat

YEAR'S PRICES

5.81 Cents Per Quart Between Producer And Consumer

Ottawa, Mar. 27 (CP)—The milk problem was agricultural committee of the House of Commons continued today under the chairmanship of M. C. Senn (Cons., Haldimand).

Napoleon Charbonneau, vice-president and treasurer of J. J. Joubert, Limited, Montreal, was the first witness.

The dairy business suffers from over-production," said Mr. Charbonneau, explaining the method of estimating the essential 3.5 per cent. butter fat in milk sold to consumers. If milk contained more, the farmers was above 3.5 per cent, a premium was paid at the rate of one cent a decrease. If the milk was below 3.5 per cent, the company imposed a penalty.

Average Prices.

Average prices paid to producers throughout the year, said Mr. Charbonneau, were 2.81 cents per hundredweight in the spring to $1.21 in summer and $1.61 in fall. It was impossible to determine the supply that would be required for any length of time prior to marketing.

Some time ago his company had "laid off a number of employees, but an agreement was reached whereby they were brought back and are assigned to surplus, while the price paid was increased by the butter and cheese factories.

"So", declared Mr. Charbonneau, "production is good for animals it is good for people."

Profit of $158,227.

Gross sales of the Joubert Company for 1932 amounted to $2,907,764, he said, and profit, he said, for 1932 was $158,227.

The Joubert Company was a subsidiary of the Borden Company, said Mr. Charbert, but was operated as a distinct company under the laws of Quebec.

To Mr. A. Tummon (Cons., Hastings South) witness declared in 1932 his company had purchased 7,297,396 pounds of fluid milk. The average cost of this milk was 1.382 per 100 pounds. This was the price to the producer, who was required to pay freight.

Then per quart to the distributor was 3.87 cents.

When was the average selling price per quart to the consumer for 1932?" asked Mr. Tummon.

Price Per Quart.

Mr. Charbert answered the average price was 5.81 cents per quart. The spread between the price paid to the producer and the price paid from the consumer was 5.54 cents per quart.

"When you purchase from the Borden Company do you pay them a specific rate?" Mr. Tummon asked.

"We give them 10 cents a hundred weight," was the reply of Mr. Charbert.

Witness could not detail the costs which made up the spread of 5.81 cents per quart, but average and selling costs were 5.56 cents a quart and 10 cents a hundredweight amounted to a quarter of a cent a quart. To be deducted from the spread of 5.81 cents.

Surplus milk was turned into butter. "Very little went into sweet cream."

The newspaper Izvestia said yesterday that neither the recent Anglo-Russian agreement for a trade agreement with Great Britain nor a British diplomatic protest can intimidate the Soviet government into abandoning its proceedings.

OXFORD GROUP PAYS SECOND VISIT TO CITY

Seven "Groupers" Hear Belleville Persons "Witness"

VISIT UNHERALDED

Formation of Groups in City is Expected as Result

With the almost unheralded appearance at the conclusion of a session of the Toronto Oxford Group, who were "guided" to come to Belleville on Saturday evening and subsequent meetings over the week end, the impulse of the Oxford movement which was launched here some weeks ago, with a team of fifteen Toronto members visited the city, the second step in what will ultimately result in the organization of "groups" in Belleville was taken. Meetings Saturday evening and Sunday were in the nature of what is called "house parties" and a follow-up of the big week-end gathering held here three weeks ago.

Commenting today on the second appearance of the Groupers, Rev. Ralph Brown, president of the Ministerial Association, who late Saturday evening attended the meeting of the group on short notice, stated that he did not know exactly what the next move is. I have been informed that they have definitely helped and are conscious of a real and new life. But there is no decision to be made," stated Rev. Mr. Neal, Rev. Gerald Graham and Rev. Mr. Brown, who were present with some such local formations, which may be made tomorrow night.

To the second visit of the groupers there were but Mrs. Ferguson, who headed the first team, Mrs. Beal and her daughter, Miss Barbara Beale, and Mrs. Ross Wilson, Mr. Keith Mayhee and two others.

Meeting in Hotel

The week-end meetings were not public but the same as those of the previous meetings were. The visiting team arrived in the city Friday and as ran "true to form" in their meeting in a hotel. The meeting was held in the Rotary room of the hotel.

Their real purpose was to intensify the reaction to the first visit and to lead others on the road of God. They went into the whole question thoroughly and the meeting was in the question of guidance and the whole Bible.

Saturday evening meeting was well attended by Belleville folk who had been invited to meet the visitors themselves. On Sunday afternoon there was a meeting of the Sunday school workers and on Sunday evening there was a meeting of the meetings at which a number of Belleville people were present along with the visiting groupers. Those who attended this session spoke of the impressive power of the address to the messages and the testimony of the witnesses present. About fifty were present.

Contact With Originals

As a result of the second visit, Rev. Mr. Neal, Rev. Mr. Brown say they did a practical work by contacting Mrs. Ferguson who took her place to the Bible in their lives, though the people have an experience with God who has not as much as they should. They urged them to have real contact with another organization which might possibly be one other body whose interest is in evangelism to have to meet. They make it clear that they are in the church and not in the church.

"We are hoping," said Mr. Neal, "to have contact with the original Oxford Group who visited Toronto. We are not certain just where they are at present, nor are the Toronto people sure of their location. But we hope to bring a number of them here. After the groundwork done by the Toronto men the coming of the original Oxford Groupers to Belleville would just sweep Belleville and the district by storm, as some of the Toronto visitors said.

THE LOCAL PAPER

Praise of the work of the smaller city newspapers which serves their communities as no large city paper can under any circumstances serve them, was recently given by a large metropolitan newspaper. Commenting upon this view newspapers in some parts of the province have given some interesting sidelights on the matter.

The Woodstock Review and the Lindsay Post have both indicated how in reporting county councils the smaller papers serve readers. The paper in the large city cannot by any stretch of the imagination be called a competitor, because the readers of the public in a large city are not interested in the detailed reports of county council meetings whereas the readers of the town and smaller city papers are vitally interested. The Lindsay Post carried within its pages 240 inches of news on the business and debate in the last meeting of Victoria County Council, twelve columns of news. This is about 10,000 words.

Comparison of this total with the total of space allowed to the same county in a metropolitan daily are shown the truth. The metropolitan paper cannot give such space, it would not pay, and even for the sake of their readers Conny can't blame large city papers cannot run such extended reports, but the Lindsay Post and other papers published in the metropolis can do so and this home town is much the best news in the paper for the home people.

This same condition relates to the news generally. Metropolitan papers can give only bare abbreviated summaries and their view point is often distorted by the reporting of an element in a news story which is quite different from the local viewpoint of interest.

The Post sums up the situation: "People who want to know all the news of their district and full details of all the news must subscribe to a local paper. It is the only place you can get it."

TOURISTS PAY

Visitors in Canada, otherwise known as tourists, to approximately $194,000,000 in the Dominion for the year according to the Bureau of Statistics. This is $57,000,000 less than the year before. Canadians spent in the United States last year $58,000,000 or $18,000,000 less than in 1931. This is a trade balance to the good of $136,000,000 and the favorable balance of $175,000,000 in 1931.

Montreal Star, therefore, says the depression cost Canada in 1932 the amount of $39,000,000 in tourist business.

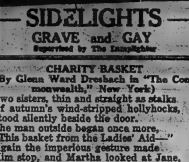
The loss last year was heaviest in the motor tourist class. In 1931 this class left over $100,000,000 behind and last year $145,307,000.

One of the anomalies of the situation is that the number for the longer period spent $4.25 more a day last year than the year before; while the short period visitor spent fifty cents less a day on the average. The rise in the average spent by the long term motor guest is explained by the exchange situation which prompted buying in Canada and also by the fact that this motor tourist averaged a longer stay than ever before.

The sumtotal of the tourist trade almost shocks by its size. Many people have been inclined to doubt estimates of the amount of money left by tourists but the Bureau of Statistics says it is founded on a careful survey of the year.

TOO MUCH THIRD PERSON

Swedish intellectuals have a new grievance. Learned Swedes are writing letters to the newspapers to protest the pressing and vital. By immemorial habit and tradition it is taboo to address a person other than his landlord, servant or messenger directly. Even the intimate 'thou' is severely restricted. According to the Stockholm correspondent of The London Times, a grateful child doesn't write to, even to its parents. "Does mama object to my going to the cinema?" Strangers, if men, must be called "uncle"; if women, "aunt." Such a custom seems to go back far into the night of time and clan and the complicated relation-system of "primitive" tribes.



To give a man his correct indirect address you cannot know his office, business, profession, at any rate his position in life, is. Every newspaper man is "Mr. Editor." A person who can't be placed but has the look and the air of responsibility is called "Doctor." There are millions of these doctors-by-courtesy in the United States, but in Sweden "Doctress" wife is "Doctress." So the wife of a Colonel, actual or honorific, is "Colonelless." This equality of the sexes may get research America. Nor have these matters of titular reverence, recalling a German pattern:

"Will Mr. Von Tolesleidealer Smith dine with us tonight?" is the Swedish version of "Come and dine, Mr. Smith." "May I offer Mr. Consulgeneral Jones another drink—and perhaps also Mr. Municipalsanitationdepartmentchief Williams?"

How are you to style a man whom you know nothing about? What are you to do in such a case, if the social instinct gets the better of prudent silence? Listen and you learn!

Recently a man who crossed from Gothenburg to London was unfortunate enough not to know a single passenger on board. His thirst for conversation and the only way he found he could address the man sitting opposite to him in the dining saloon was as "Mr. Steamboatpassenger."

King Gustav is called upon to "remove this burden" from suffering people. It is to be hoped and expected that he won't interfere. Burden. Why, this must be one of the most delightful games the bright and gifted more than worth learning Swedish for.—New York Times.

CHARITY BASKET
(By Glenn Ward Dresbach in "The Cosmopolitan," New York)

Two sisters, slim and straight as stalks
Of autumn's wind-stripped hollyhocks,
Stood silently beside the door.

And then a man began once more,
"This basket from the Ladies' Aid..."
Again the imperious gesture made.

Slim stop, and Martha looked at Jane,
And then at the family down the lane—
But no relation . . . Just the name.
I wondered about it when they came."

And Jane still stared at the wall
Of family portraits, stern and tall,
So proud of bearing, cold of eye,
Said, "Leave it. We'll be going by."

His mittened, tipped his hat
And trudged away. The buggy cat
Against the basket rubbed and purred.
And Martha looked at Jane and heard
Her cry with all the pride she has—
"I have a feeling that he believes
He found the right place after all."
But Jane was staring at the wall . . .

Two statues, old and left alone
In a mansion dim, mouldy stone
Where pride and beauty walked before—
Stood by the basket at the door.

"CAVALCADE", the master motion picture of the year, and perhaps a good many years, was screened at Hollywood. In a recent paragraph in this column we neglected to give credit to Hollywood for the screening, while praising British direction and artistry. This was called to our attention by a "Constant Reader," who believes in keeping this column absolutely fair and to give credit where credit is due, etc.

Consequently we are glad to give Hollywood all credit for screening one of the best pictures of all times, and also to add for the benefit of our "American Cousins," south of the border line, that Hollywood has many achievements to its credit in the cinema line and not the least enjoyment of the science of motion pictures. While we wish to give British film production its due credit, however, that does not imply that Hollywood has gone "haywire," or has never gone anywhere. SO-LONG-O as the Hebrew Poet-Lyrist, Sweet Singer of Israel, who slew the braggart Goliath with a few wee bit stanzas from his harmonious lyre, and thanks for the cash and the kind words for Sidelights, indicating that the "Family" of readers is still acting "keen and proprietary interest in the column, which is as it should be.

RAILWAY EXCURSIONS, discontinued for many years as a feature in railway management. Going back to first principles, lunch counters for the public at stations, and sandwiches and railway pie are announced as one week-end excursions between Montreal and Toronto. Also one long ago the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, the short railway with the long name, used to fit up a string of flat cars, board sides decorated with evergreens along both sides, and run excursions from both ends of the line. One of the cars was fixed up for the use of refreshments. This was called by Manager Mooney of the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie, used to take keen revenge on those saying that if his road was not as long as the C.P.R. it was just as wide. This railway started originally for Sault Ste. Marie via North Bay, but after collecting a number of bonuses from municipalities, rested at Westport, just about forty miles from where it started. Don't imagine that the Brockville and Westport is any jerkwater railway just because it isn't as long as the C.P.R. or G.N.R. No, sirree, not at all. It's an age-old railway property in North America this has the foreigner—and this abbreviated railway can boast of, neither of its two bigger brothers can do, carry passengers right through to Athens without change—and wasn't it Sir Richard Cartwright who told the House of Commons that the C.P.R. would never pay for the Greece on its axle wheels.

By dint of much persistence the enterprising young salesman found himself at length in the presence of the great man he had been hankering.

"I really can't see you," said the great man with some irritation.

"Then it's lucky for you," said the intruder calmly. "I represent a firm of opticians."

DO YOU SEEK FOR MATERIAL CONVENIENCES

Fetish of Personal Comfort Worship is Everywhere

BY LOUIS K. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Personality

If there is one country in the world where sanitary comforts are taken care of it is the United States. Here are there so many conveniences thought out for ease, saving of labor and enjoyment, that we sad nations in the way we are bound, do, indeed and need for greatly. Indeed, we make of personal comfort a sort of fetish to be worshipped and sacrificed to.

Excellent as such a program of life may be, it has its dangers when the fact that when a human becomes used to comfort and even luxury, it does not take long before he accepts them as a matter of course and as his natural due, which we might designate as materialistic pleasure seeking and greed.

Then what's left? Do we really feel satisfied when the craving for comfort and ownership has been appeased? Are we content and happy simply because we have obtained finally to own a car, a palatial home, a radio, or even a kitchen in which everything is run by electricity?

No; life demands more than even the essentials of life. It is a full and well-rounded life—the only kind of life that is deeply gratifying. As a matter of fact, material things must be comfortable; but in addition it must be beautiful. Something that intangible something which may be called "soul."

The needs of the spirit, the call of the spirit—however you choose to describe it—is something as a longing for the higher and better things—and it is only when all is not much enthusiasm as is given to maintaining the body and its physical salary, and all that entails in the way of comforts and conveniences, blessings alone will not do; appreciative living demands nourishment for the spirit, as well as for the mind and hand we may try to ignore its insistent demands.

Therefore, while increasing our creature comforts and enjoying many of all the wonderful advances for enjoyment that present-day life has to offer, let us not forget the needs of our emotional character which has to do with the nobler values.

Let us not be satisfied merely with delicacies for the appetite, but let us learn how to enjoy books that deal with more searching characterizations, and with the finer and subtler beauty that lies in poetry. Let us experiment with art and music developed a taste for sculpture, painting and the finer crafts which are scarcely pass the time witnessing any form of motion picture, but try it on, instead, to selection, remembering that our dramatic fare mostly that which is best remembered is worth seeing.

Then be sure to get your fill of nature. Consider the fields, the flowers, the trees, the birds and the boys of color harmony, of color contrast. Likewise the esthetic delight to be had from open spaces.

Lastly, it must be remembered that life has not been given to us for animal side of us quickly loses its thrill unless accompanied by the spiritual side of our natures die from disease. In fact, the longer we wait the heavier it is to shift the Nihest responses; and it may easily happen, when we are old, we are left with worthy comforts and torn to use, pitiful for that we find we have wailed too long.

DENIES REPORT OF RESIGNING

Premier Undoubtedly Sick Man Will Carry on

Toronto, March 27 (CP)—With the end of its present session less than three weeks away, the Ontario Legislature is settling down to hard work with a will. Premier George S. Henry, who was the centre of heated reports he was about to resign because of ill health, presided over a lengthy cabinet meeting following the routine business of the House, which is yet to come before the House.

Many Private Members' Bills will occupy most of the Legislature's time, including measures dealing with mortgages and mortgagees' relief bill and the Workmen's Compensation Act. Tenders, numerous committees will be set to work and the budget debate will begin with J. H. Elliott, Liberal financial critic, leading off.

It is understood every effort will be made to avoid placing further physical strain upon the prime minister who is admittedly a sick man. Shortly after the Legislature opened last month, he was taken ill with a severe cold which developed into two weeks was unable to return to the House, the government being led by the Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney General, when the Premier was absent. The Premier has been under the care of his physician for the long grind of preparing the budget address, which he delivered on Thursday for Hon. H. A. Dunlop, Minister of Mines, who is in charge of the present through illness the entire session.

The arduous task of delivering the budget proving a great strain on Mr. Henry, who has not yet fully rallied momentarily, fighting for his strength, and it is hoped that afterwards came the reports of his resignation would cease.

Among those who attended the play at the Premier Himself in Conference with the Canadian Press Saturday, Mr. Henry, discussed the budget address, and the feeling much better and added: "I'm all right. How's everything else, sick?" Rumors of his resignation, Mr. Henry's personal physician, Dr. G. D. Farquharson, said there was nothing to it. "The Premier's manner could not, with care, "carry on through even the session at least."

As matters stand now the House will have little more than enough for the programme, but still has the budget debate, the Workmen's Compensation Bill, and an opposition attack on the Ambidi deal, before it. Questions of the day are expected to include the Progressive and Liberals intend to bring forward in the form of legislation, whereby the Hydro will ultimately take over the Ambidi Canyon Power project.

Dollars to Doughnuts that many housewives of Belleville have gone without their daily tasks these days with an ear to the door bell—they may have both eyes and ears focused on the oven but the ear is cocked for the sound of the front door bell which carries a thrill akin to that of a telephone call. Because there is a man going about Belleville with a bag full of crisp dollar bills—perfectly good dollar bills that—because they are genuine—have a half-pound or pound package of Salada Tea. The Frost of His Father's Wife was the subject chosen by the contributed various items and the topics embraced a wide range. Everyone who attended report the evening most enjoyable.

Mrs. Ed. Holmes held their March meeting with all members present. The devotional part of the meeting was with the Mission Band in charge. Mrs. Holmes presided at the piano. Items of interest from the Literature and Temperance Societies were given. Friday last. It was a very pleasant meeting and refreshments were served by the hostess.

For the proposal to cut off pensions of veterans employed by the Government, Hon. Ian Mackenzie, report for the opposition, was criticized by Hon. C. H. Cahan on Friday last. If such a thing was proposed by a private concern it would be called robbery, he declared. He argued that the Government had no right to decompense them for their loss of time or service and the pay given to them cannot be set off.

As matters stand, the Prime Minister had done away with any confidence in respect to the Government's policy. Nothing definite has been given. Friday last the assurance was given to action would be taken on the budget proposal relative to pensions, but the fear is whether the proposal had been generally interpreted.

At the same time, he asked the veterans, in the light of what had been done, to wait and see what was brought to the matter and to keep their confidence in the Government within the next ten days.

Many rumors have been circulated purporting to set forth that the Government had come to a decision on a definite policy which contemplated a sweeping cut in pensions. These were set at rest Saturday when a statement of the Associated Veterans declared that no decision had been reached. Any statement which had it that the government had reached a decision on pensions was premature, he said. The veterans would be consulted further by the Government before anything affecting their interests was done.

WAR PENSIONS FEDERAL JOBS

Budget Amendment Expected to Exempt Small Pensioner

A motion on the budget which was presented to the House of Commons Tuesday last by the Hon. Mr. Ian Mackenzie, Minister of Finance, has become the subject of much discussion throughout the province, and the Civil Service, particularly men in pensions and the private where general public affairs are discussed. The motion reads as follows:

"It may say that with respect to pensions that it was the policy of the government and who are paid the salary of the position, action will be taken whereby the payment of the pension will be suspended during the period of such employment. Where the full salary of the position is not paid, the pension payment may not exceed the amount of the difference between the salary received and the established salary of the position. If the pension is greater than the salary, the excess only shall affect either to be paid the pension and relinquish the position, or to retain the position and forego the pension during the period of such employment. This resolution shall not apply to the government service but only to the government corporations whose activities are financed from the public funds."

From one who has been about the House of Commons for two or three years, the writer has learned down a way learned that the general impression among the men who are receiving pensions is that the pension will be exempt. In local discussions the viewpoint has likewise been brought out.

Mr. W. R. Thomson, M.P., for this riding, in an interview with the local newspaperman on Saturday, said:

"While my sympathy is with the returned men in the present conditions would I want to break faith with him, my great concern is with the man who is drawing a small salary and a small pension." From the remarks given the Ottawa Capital of the government's intention regarding pensions appears in the budget, and the amount set below which pensions would not be taxed. It would appear that few, if any, civil service war pensioners in the province would be affected by the tax.

At the opening of the House on Monday, Mr. Thomson commented that there are to be further explanations by the Government regarding over the deductions of pensions and other government employees announced in the budget. Mr. Rhodes said it is not the intention of the Government to tax small pensions.

Father Clarence, C.P., the nuns were seated on a platform erected in the sanctuary and from this platform was presented the address to the pastor, Rev. Father Augustine who is in charge of the Redemptorist Fathers.

Reverend Father Augustine, C.P., responded with a few words of thanks with outstanding success in Canada and the United States. In the pastoral sermon of Sunday morning Father Augustine, C.P., spoke briefly on the subject of "Lenten Resolutions."

Calling for his text the words "Be, but I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people" the preacher impressed the congregation with the fact that the mission was a personal affair between God and the soul, and the mission was for each individual there. Here, in time of mercy, grace and salvation." In prior of this, instances were cited from the Old Testament of missions sent by God to the people.

World Needs Missions

The present mission, then, was also just one more of those messages sent by God to the people, and it was a mission there can be no doubt in the minds of the people of evil and vice in the world today.

The mission was for all, the preacher explained. Good, bad and indifferent were invited to make it and every one must make it for his or her own peace of soul and that it might prove for each a term a time of mercy, grace and salvation.

Father Augustine concluded an invitation for all non-Catholics so that they might have the benefit of the graces of the mission, pointing out that the mission was not for the purpose of abuse or criticism anyone's religion but to bring the truth of God's word to the soul and its salvation.

This week services are for the women and include all from high school age. Next week will be for the men and boys.

Evening devotions are being held all next week at 7.30 o'clock and close with a quick and seven-thirty each morning.

The church accommodation was taxed to capacity last night when the women's mission opened and the attendance at the first mass this morning was very large.

Ing reading on "Country Highways", the writer of this article being Miss Chapman. This reading was beautifully sung and prayed. Community singing was indulged in during the afternoon when Mr. Bert Hall made the meeting more cheery. The visitors were also given a treat by a work one of which spoke words of encouragement to carry on the good work.

The guest speaker, Dr. Webb of Roslin, addressed the gathering on that fatal disease—Tuberculosis. Dr. Webb explained very thoroughly and cautiously the effects, preventive and dangers of the disease, particularly with young children, and every precaution should be taken on the part of parents. He also stated that the body or Institute workers can be a factor of prevention by using their influence in many cases. Indeed the branch was very grateful to have Dr. Webb with them, and were more than delighted with his instructive message. Mrs. P. Farrar and Mrs. M. Reid, in their usual pleasing manner, sang a duet, that old familiar air "Anne Lauria" which was much enjoyed.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem and singing of grace, and Mrs. Garbutt and her assistants served a delicious lunch.

Tulle time out in a novel manner. A new evening bag has a round clasp of enamel with buttons done in marcasite. When the bag is opened this clasp is worn as a decoration on the gown in contrasting hue.

It seems impossible to get rid of velvet; even if we wanted to rid of it course we don't. For it is surely the most decorative of fabrics. And now it is being used for jewelry, a novelty that will be welcomed by all. Jet being spaced by balls of blue velvet. Very effective.

We must be trained to the new fashion trends or frocks that are being shown by the very smart houses. A lovely model is one done in black lacquered satin. Its back is cut in deep points and the front is wrapped round and buttons on the side with large jet and rhinestone buttons. The sleeves are short black straps are of black sequins.

A new particularity is that of black and white. Black and white is a favorite it is too. Thus with an all black evening gown has been added a woven a tailored jacket of the pique in white. The jacket is full in front has broad shoulders and a black satin welt with brilliance. The sleeves has small tabs of the white pique.

An immediate need for every day is the cool green dress done in big, slender lines. Such a model is done in black crepe woolen. The straight peg skirt is trimmed by graduated curved tucks and the jacket has the new peplum. The white pique revers.

CHAPTER THREE

"Listen," said Betty Cavendish, with a sudden inspiration, as the action players. "Don't talk to her Carter's home."

"Carter nor pretty Mab" Fulton sated, scribing her slipped and ed.

"Yes. My dear," explained Betty, dramatically, shuffling cards busily, with beautifully groomed hands whose slim rings were cool with vermillion, "as we brought home this morning he is taking it for me—"

"Betty, for heaven's sake, Betty," protested stout Hope Bray, pushing back her chair.

"No, no, no; it's all right," she with hardening to explain her hand and on the desk cards. "He was in a hurry, and he didn't want it to go into the papers. He hurt his ankle, that's all. Bigge says he'll have to lay up for a few days."

"Poor old Carl! He must be mad," said Mab, for he, Betty?"

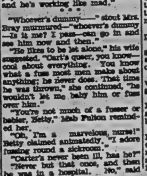
"Fixed up in the library there," Mrs. Cavendish jerked her pretty head in the direction of the adjoining room. "I have a lot of papers sent up here from the office, and I like quiet, like now."

"Whoever's directory—" stout Mrs. Bray murmured—"whoever's dummy is it now? I presume you do not mind telling me?"

"He thinks to be let alone," his wife answered animatedly. "I adore running round a sickroom, don't you, Mab? Oh, I'll ha be!"

"Never but that once, and then he was in a hospital. No," said Mab, "but they get an awful struggle hold on the men, these office wives. My sympathies are with the office nurse who got Fred Terry after Lena Ashwell threw him down. I was a fright. He just saw her every day and looked over his footprints and her and anything until he thought she was the Venus de Milo."

"Prophetically a terrible thing," Betty admitted. "Once mother had a man come in to teach me riding" she began suddenly. I was about 16. I'd had correlative of spine infection, or something, and I had to ride—"



"Well, this instructor was a Frenchman, a peasant, nearly red-haired man and with the brain of an infant, mind you, but he had that French way with horses, sizing you up, saying 'Ah-ha-ha!' when you came to the affaire all, and I am a man!' I don't mean he did anything, but I was young, and we had a grand time, and it was all propinquity and riding, and I'll add that I fell and I fell terribly; really I mean it. But about the last time I was on his back I met Clubb—I had a crush on Bob Wilson then, and I give you my word that the mere sight of Petrie all but made me sick."

"Betty, you're a terror!" Hope reproached her fondly.

"Well, I mean, you do if Carl got a stenographer who wasn't old and homely, Betty," Mab said, "I wouldn't mind a crush. He'd do him good, and I'm sure I trust Carl."

"You're awfully sensible about it, Betty," she said, "I'm sure I couldn't be that way the way I've told him, by not being jealous."

"I'm not jealous, just enough if I had any reason to be!" the hostess answered, laughing. "Now, there's no one, sirs," she interrupted herself, as a step sounded in the hall, "this rubber before ten, or aren't you, Hope?"

"Not yours, Helen."

"Betty, I dont mind explaining that my secretary got sick in the middle of the morning, an old-fashioned, comfortable country manor hidden among the trees, and the roads, the cake and eucalyptus trees, the deep gardens and the suburbs most accelerative quarter.

When the game was finished Betty went to the door to see Carter Stead to him in the fire for tea, when there was an interruption. Mrs. Cavendish had to be excluded by her mother's arms and Carter Stead, who had come in even while she shyly greeted mother's friends. Betty was giving assistance to do her homework, and Anne was with her, and Mrs. Trumbull had come. And Mrs. Trumbull had come.

"Trumbull?"

"From Dandy office, mother."

"Why I thought it was Miss Curtis. Well, you run along, honey, and I'll be right down. You and Anne can have cocoa or anything you like, dear. There was a violent violin?"

"Why he says I have been looking lately," Patsy laughed joyously, and showed the space where a tooth had fallen out.

"Oh, you mustn't do that," her mother said.

She turned to her companions, "Isn't she wonderful? She has an extraordinary with her music, she has had a violin a string cut, and all to hear her play some time, "To the cafe and dance."

Patsy gave the group a general curtsey, and escaped, leaving a memory of "Isn't she adorable?" behind her.

A moment later the four women sat down to tea in the softly and luxuriously furnished tea table, beside the fire, when an unexpected voice spoke suddenly and pleasantly from the doorway.

"Betty Cavendish!"

The others turned to see a tall girl standing in the glow of the early spring twilight. She was fresh and cream and gold and pale brown, in oatmeal-brown tweeds, brown hat and fine brown furs.

Her pale brown hair, cream skin, and golden-brown eyes were startling the note. Her costume was simplicity's name, and there was no paint, no earrings; an immaculate plain frill, falling away to show her rounded creamy throat, was the only softening touch in brown suit or hat.

But there was a suggestion of something individual, something vital, in her appearance, of which the others were conscious.

"I'm Miss Trumbull from the office," she said, expectantly, unsmiling. "They told me—your man told me—that Mr. Cavendish was in the house."

me—that Mr. Cavendish was in the house. I don't find him there.

"Oh, yes," Betty said, getting to her feet. "He arrived about 4 o'clock." She added, a little confusedly, "The doctor was here to keep quiet for a day or two—and I know he telephoned Miss Curtis...."

"But he hasn't," the visitor said, beside her," Sandra explained, with a glimpse of her own white teeth. "Before Mrs. Cavendish could speak again Carter Stead interrupted to and stood beside the girl in the doorway.

"Betty said you were here," he said, "I was telephoning the office now and almost I was afraid you'd missed your train. We'd go him to the station."

He nodded easy greetings to his wife's guests. He and Sandra Fulton appeared together and Miss Fulton threw a deep breath.

"Do you know, Betty," she observed, "I don't think I've seen you before and the age. If that girl a day over twenty I'll eat my hat."

"Miss Curtis, you mean?" Betty Cavendish said with a laugh. "Oh, she's not a girl, that's just one of the office girls; what did she say the nurse said? I never happened to see her before."

"I'll bet you never happened to see her before!" agreed Mab, significantly.

"She's gorgeous," Helen Peabody said, simply.

"She's got a perfectly awful, unitary crush on Carter, too," said Rose Bray, severely, and pouring out her sandwiches, asked innocently:

"I don't like her," Betty laughed, "I'll have to make it my business to find out."

"SAINT AND SINNER"

How often do you put a quietus on praise by remarking "I know so much in myself that I am a complete worker," or "I remember when she was a little dumb girl," or "I just know—she lived in the little brown house" thus detracting the credit of further conversation in favor of the person.

Do you proceed in the same way whether it be progress made or whether it be further.

If so you must have a mean spirit in your heart.

How would you like to work hard, reach a position of prominence and have some jealous person allude to you as former bus station or sweat-boy.

You wouldnt like it.

Then why not intend to please when you reflected inwardly on the success it has cheered, even higher in the scale.

Perhaps your own record carries derogatory public opinion and as was Mr. Gladstone, you can answer remarks when others are praised, even deservedly.

Serious violations of the law cannot be forgotten of course, but there is power to that one who has a desire to move onwards and actually works to accomplish.

EXPORT TRADE IS OBJECTIVE

Reorganization of The U. S. Commerce Bureau is Authorized

By James F. Schwar, Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, March 26.—A self moving drive for greater export trade by the Department of Commerce is indicated by the proposed reorganization which was announced today by Secretary Roper and Assistant Secretary Domercq.

The reorganization announced today that under plans practically completed, calling for a new alignment of the bureau, the quest for revived international trade will be concentrated in Canada and the Pan-American nations.

The reorganization of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which controls the arms throughout the world, under the direction of Harvey Gaffney, a veteran of plentiful federal money, calls for four small divisions, a director and an assistant director. At present three assistants are provided for.

These four divisions would be known as Foreign Tariffs, Commercial Information, Pan-American and Statistical Trade, and Domestic Commerce.

The plan calls for abolition of a majority of the 39 foreign offices scattered throughout the world; leaving only the 14 Latin American and Canadian offices and those in London, Berlin, Paris, Cairo, Melbourne, Rome, Vienna, Tokyo and Shanghai.

The foreign tariff division as its name implies would be intended to be one of the key organizations in the announced intention of President

REVIVE LOST AMENDMENT

Outlawing of Child Labor Gains Momentum

Washington, March 25 (AP) — A "lost" United States constitutional amendment has come back to life, becoming a real issue in the proposal for repeal of the 18th amendment.

Revived one is the plan to outlaw exploitation of child labor, proposed by Congress the present session, until this year by six States, declared by Congress.

It was an outcast slap-child, virtually abandoned, despite the fact that Congress placed no time limit for its ratification, because it seemed destined to wend from State to State to make up the necessary 36.

Then surprisingly this year Georgia ratified, and Washington and North Dakota, 7th, latter had been a solid "no" for years.

This week Ohio's legislature ratified, and then the supporters of the child amendment set up a boast.

But the foes of child labor, the shady workers against sweatshop exploitation of minors, give much of the credit for revived interest to their amendment, to Frances Perkins.

With others she who is now Secretary of Labor, reported to a child labor conference in Washington last November a return of reviving conditions of employment of many industrial sections.

HEADACHES, DIZZY SPELLS, FELT TIRED AND DRAGGY

MANY women who suffer from these complaints from weakening drain, attacks and headache, can find relief by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Read Mrs. Jessie Smith of 42 Dieppe St., St. Catharines, Ont., says: "I suffered with headaches and dizzy spells. I felt tired and dragged out and could not sleep well. I did not feel well at night. I was also troubled with backache and pains in my side. After a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and Dr. Pierce's Pellets I was strengthened my entire system." MARION TALLY MAY MAKE CONCERT TOUR

Lately Secured Divorce From Her Husband.

NEW YORK—Marion Tally, whose debut eight years ago in the Metropolitan Opera House is still talked about as a sensation, likes to sing, but "I don't get paid for most of it," she says.

"On a launch," the Kansas City girl will return next autumn to the concert stage," she said, "I guess that's what you'd call it—a launch," she added with a faint smile.

Constipation Drove Her Wild

Was a trouble thought to be fatal years, headaches, dizzy spells, poor skin. Just natural, how she found relief. Now she's happy. Read Nature's warning! Simple herbs brings relief. Don't suffer! Don't neglect! Don't worry! Don't gamble! Get NATURE'S REMEDY (NR) Tablets tonight. NATURE'S REMEDY (NR) Tablets are a purely vegetable laxative. They are gentle yet thorough. Get a 25c box today. Only 25c at all druggists. Get NR TONIGHT.

Miss Tally procured an annulment in January of her marriage to Michael Handelaer, a German pianist many years her senior, whom she married in 1931. She charged he had failed to live up to an agreement whereby her mother and her sister were to make their home with her.

If you wish to win the sympathy of friend or enemy then you must talk then the crudest and most stupid things, and think nothing.

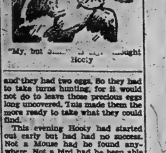
A Double Retreat

Who brains still doth save his face, In quick retreat finds no disgrace.



Jimmy Skunk had retreated before his cousin Shadow the Weasel. Shadow is very much smaller than Jimmy. Besides that, Shadow is plainly not afraid. Yet Jimmy had not hesitated to attack Jimmy, and Jimmy had headed away. No, Jimmy is not a coward. Not a bit of it. Jimmy simply saw no reason for fighting with this little cousin. Perhaps he felt himself in the wrong. Perhaps he had been taking a nap curled up in a hollow between the roots of an old stump. Jimmy had only awakened him by thrusting in a black paw armed with sharp claws, feeling for the Mouse he thought might possibly be in there.

Shadow, always short of temper, had attacked Jimmy with much selfassurance that for the moment he was confused. You see it was so pitch-dark in there, that Shadow couldn't see his little scolding, and having all sorts of fighting with Shadow he had retreated.

"My, my," muttered Jimmy as he ambled along. "That small cousin of mine has a temper! He certainly has a temper. He is regular hair-trigger. He chuckled, then continued: "Nothing to be ashamed of in coming to standing up for his rights he is a credit to the family. Shadow-it, I guess it is a good thing he isn't any bigger than he is. He knows how to take care of himself, that little fellow does. Well, that is true of all the Weasel family. I don't know of any family whose members are better able to look out for themselves. I'm proud to belong to it."

Jimmy continued to amble along just within the edge of the Green Forest. He was in no hurry, for there never is in a hurry, for that matter. Nor was he paying attention to anything in particular. He was quiet for fat beetles or other things to eat. He had made no effort to keep out of sight of possible enemies for he feared none. Perhaps this is not quite true. He had quite forgotten Hooty the Great Horned Owl. If Jimmy didn't exactly fear Hooty he at least held Hooty in great respect. Only a few days ago he had seen or heard Hooty and had quite forgotten him.

Now Hooty and Mrs. Hooty had had quite as hard a winter as any of their neighbors. During the worst of it they had moved a short way south, but had returned as soon as conditions became less severe. They had nested and still were glad to get anything to eat and were not at all squeamish as to what it was. They had begun housekeeping decidedly late in the season, for there was snow and ice in the Green Forest.

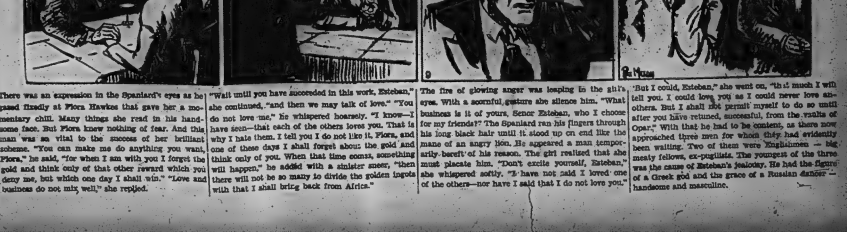
"My, but ... ought Hooty and they had two eggs. So they had to take turns hunting, for it would never do to leave those precious eggs long uncovered. Tuis made them the more ready to take what they could find.

This evening Hooty had started out early but had had no success. Not a Mouse had he found anywhere. Not a bird had he been able to startle from sleep by his fierce hunting call. It began to look as if he would have to return to relieve Mrs. Hooty on the nest as empty as he had started forth. And then he saw something moving softly along the edge of the Great Forest. He recognized Jimmy Skunk instantly. Without the least hesitancy he glided toward Jimmy. "My, but Jimmy is fat!" thought Hooty. "He will make a meal for both of us. If he doesn't see me before I strike he never will know what hit him. People make a lot of fuss about that scent he throws, but I don't mind the smell of it at all. My, my, but he will make a good meal!"

Hooty had just set himself to strike with those terrible curved claws of his when Jimmy chanced to turn. He saw those great glaring eyes of Hooty and without a second of hesitation he went into action with that powerful little scent-gun of his.

Hooty the Great Horned Owl was blinded him instantly and painfully. He fell, flapping helplessly to the ground screaming with pain and rage. Jimmy Skunk hastily backed off. For the time being his enemy the one he really feared, was in a way almost helpless. But Jimmy wisely was satisfied to let well enough alone. He would not go within reach of those terrible claws or that savage beaked bill.



So Jimmy retreated and a little later, when he could begin to see, Hooty the Great Horned Owl retreated in the other direction.

W. C. KETCHESON IS HONORED ON BIRTHDAY

Friends Gather to Congratulate Former Man on 72nd Birthday

Honoring Mr. W. C. Ketcheson on his seventy-second birthday, a surprise party which took the form of an open house reception was arranged at his home, Foxboro, on Wednesday by his children.

Together with numerous friends and relatives from the town, grandsons and five grand children gathered to do honour to the hale and hearty old soldier grand dad ever. A most enjoyable time was spent by the guests.

Mr. Ketcheson received birthday poor health many weeks but much improved now and unable to enter-tain his friends as by past years not was forgotten—received dozens of birthday cards and letters from friends and relatives. A letter of special importance of much enjoyment was received from a cousin in Mr. P. Casey, 72 years of age, a former resident of Belleville, who unfortunately ago his eyesight, a number of years ago, and for weeks difference between the age of Mr. Casey and Mr. Ketcheson, Mr. Casey wrote the letter of congratulations to Mr. Ketcheson and he-self, (absolutely blind), yet every-one could read the nicely worded and feelings letter.

Mr. Ketcheson received birthday cards and letters from far and near, some from friends or his daughter's in Greenwich, Conn., U.S., and past ministers and their families, who had been guests at former birthday festivals which took the form of sugar parties.

The present were Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ketcheson, Mrs. Emma Fitzjohn, age 78, (Ciss) Mills; Mrs. Reuben Bird, (Belleville); Miss Edith Bird, (Belleville); Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Ketcheson and son, Laurison; Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Ketcheson and daughter, trees; Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Ketcheson and son, Jack and daughters, Rhea, "Ann Marie", Mr. Ketcheson thanked the family one and all in his own manner for their kindness to him.

MARIE LOUISE NOT PHANTOM

Women on Brother's Mind Whole Time Says Brother

London, March 27 (AP)—Lieut. Norman Belcher-Stewart, youthful Seaforth Highlander accused of re-sending secret notes to a foreign agent, sat in the Chelsea military court today and heard his mother, Mrs. Hilda Beatrice Wright, and his brother Lieut. Eric Stewart Wright, give evidence in his defence.

The 24-year-old defendant charged of his name from Belcher to Belcher-Stewart in 1929.

Mrs. Wright, the first to testify, was bootedly dressed, wearing a black coat and black hat. Her evidence dealt largely with the young Lieutenant's income, which included an allowance from home of about $1 which he had declared was supplemented by presents from a mysterious Berlin girl, Marie Louise, who became infatuated with him.

While not denying even in court, it was common knowledge that officers of such crack regiments as his must have private means outside of their pay to keep up the social requirements and meet mess bills and the like.

Knew of Son's Visit.

Mrs. Wright knew all about her son's going to Berlin last summer but was not informed of his subsequent visit to Munich, where he testified he again met Marie Louise, with whom he got into intimate relations on his Berlin visit.

"I made a casual question unkindly," said Major Shapcott during cross examination by the prosecutor, "but from the first to the last, did he tell you about these happenings in Berlin?"

"It was not natural that he would," said Mrs. Wright.

Baillie-Stewart's brother, in testimony, however, said that the accused had taken him into his confidence about Marie Louise. Baillie-Stewart told his brother in Christmas week he had received money from her. Wright was very annoyed and testified he called his brother a "fool."

"She seemed to be his mind the whole time," added Wright.

Victor Sylvester, a dancing school teacher who came into the case after reading reports about it in the newspapers, testified he had been introduced to a girl named Marie Louise at a wedding dance-reception in Berlin last summer. This was the first witness other than the accused who testified to having seen Marie Louise.

The defence concluded its case and the court adjourned for luncheon.

CAVALCADE OUTSTANDING SCREEN PLAY

Critics Say Best Film Ever Made Showing at Belle Until Wednesday

When Noel Coward, brilliant young English writer, launched his sensational stage success, "Cavalcade" upon the world of letters, he borrowed from the technique of motion pictures. He used kaleidoscopic symbolism, the close-up and panorama. In their screen play of the same subject, which opened to large audiences Saturday, at Belle Theatre, Fox Films who produced it with interest, they put "Cavalcade" where it really belongs—in the finest medium of action—the movies.

From the first stroke of New Year 1900, when we meet the Marryot family-mother, father, two tiny children and their staff of servants, to the passing of the old year 1932, there is not a scene which does not pause over the grandeur of the thing. It is a film whose lines will go home with people and bring others to the theatre.

The picture opens with a war which takes away from their homes Robert Marryot and his father, Alfred Bridges. To their wives the ordeal would have faded into insignificance if they could have seen a few years ahead, for England's war in Africa was a toy party.

STILL HASTY RETREAT WHEN SPOTTED

The final report of the year is heard that was observed by an auto cop stood on Tuesday morning. Mr. Ross Kidd, who is in a business office, is Porter Avenue resident who had had even the slight of a youth of the neighborhood in a sharp turn on the hood, carefully starting a who sat in the limb of a tree. The youngster is said to have come down with the appearance of the auto cop, but when he saw it was the familiar face of Porter Avenue and East Dundas Street that he had very hastily retired, a number of men have been busily employed constructing the substructure for the new station which is being built on that spot by Mr. John Palmerton, Bridge Street, contractor. On Tuesday over a dozen men were at work getting the excavation and laying the foundation work.

CHUCKERS RUN IN MOIRA RIVER

Muskrats are running! Fine have been observed on the move up stream in the Moira River, on Monday afternoon, while walking along the bridge on the Dundas Street side of the river, Mr. Ralph Sexsmith observed the first of the fish to be caught this season. He was employed of the city hall, leaving for his noon-day lunch. Mr. Sexsmith's fishing. Warner was the first to report the catch for the year, the advent of the appearance of the fish.

DISTRICT ROADS WINTER WELL

Roads in the city have come through the past season in better shape than for the past several years, very little attention and repairs being required by the city engineer and department of public works employed who have been constantly on the job during the winter. One of the patching decrees that very little work will be needed this spring when the roads have dried out condition. On Tuesday, after having been completely overhauled and repainted, the city's street sweeper took up the job of cleaning the city streets.

CANADA GEESE ON WAY NORTH

Many flocks flew north on Monday and Tuesday in the afternoon, flying low over the city as they passed on their way north. The Moira River tonight north, six or seven large flocks of Canada geese were observed as they were flying with the steady honk of their leaders. This is earlier in the second flight seen this month. A week ago a flock of wild ducks were on the wing headed north in a much larger flock.

CATTLE SHIPPED FEED PRISONERS

William Pendrith, of Kingston, has been buying a number of beef cattle throughout Prince Edward County, which are being shipped to Kingston, where they will be fattened for the market. It is understood that the cattle are to supply the needs of the penitentiary, the Picton Gazette was informed.

MUSKRATS SCARCE AND PRICES LOW

Trapping in the county report a scarcity of muskrats this season, says Picton Gazette Loyalist, which is causing considerable skidding of this month and no large catches have been reported. There has been a slight advance in price so far this season, but it is below paid for good hides and that has been very variable, about 150 being the top, which is not as many as usual.

FRANK CASSIDY FINDS OLD MEDAL

Frank Cassidy, Dundas, discovered a medal in the Moira River on Tuesday. It was turned up in the mud by a cast's hook. Mr. Cassidy was fishing off the dock of a cottage on the river, when the hook caught on something. Assuming it to be a sunken log, he started to pull it in. Another find he made while fishing near Picton was a bronze medal, which bears on one side of the "iron" dollars in the United States. On the reverse side is a coin. In describing this find to Picton reporters, the latter ever interested, saying he believed the medal was struck in commemoration of, if this proved true he was willing to pay what it was worth. The finder, Mr. Simpson's, serving 3 locked. Returning later, he cast his disappointment. It was later recovered by police on another occasion, and was found to contain the medal of the car had been smashed and though the car was found to be in the parking of large transports on that street. The resident thought that the transports had and while during the night and cause ground, which dislodged the medal from their home of rest. The general concensus of them making the complaint was to the effect, that the transport drivers did not start their engines until well after the paid, night hour, and that the disturbance was investigated by the police department.

PROTESTS HEARD

Whatever the facts in regard to the German treatment of the Jewish people, the atrocities by enraged Nazis having been officially denied, the fact is clear from the earnestness of the utterance of the German spokesman that Germany is being blamed when she does not want to feel the lash of a large part of the rest of the world. If there has been ill-treatment of the Hebrew population, it is fairly safe to believe that it will cease after the world's attention has been drawn to stories emanating from Germany.

Germany does not like to bear the blame of it.

MR. ROBIN ONE-LEG

"Robin-One-Leg" whose fen years in Belleville have made it a pet has done the robin race a good deed, and has shown the robin likes a place of peace, noisy and chattering as it may be at times. The robin has shown a preference for one spot and is in many respects like its human friends who live long in the one house. As far as years go this fine bird has lived more than the average span of residence in this place.

The ungainly shapeless starling which has been an annual nuisance, by contrast, maintains the high standard of the robin which is liked among all birds. The starling is the opposite for it is more despised than the sparrow, which seems even more favored than that newest accession to our birdland, the starling.

Robin-One-Leg comes to a one-legged bird, which is making its eleventh tour up north, it is easy to understand the affection which is attracted to this bird.

TRIBUTE TO FARMERS

A fine tribute to the farmers is paid by the Forest Standard which admires the men and women who have stayed by the industry. "They surely live the life of faith," says the Standard. "They take all manner of risks—drought, hail, frost, grasshoppers, rust, soil depletion, they sell eggs, butter, and other products at a low price—yet they remain optimistic, do their best to feed themselves and their families and pay their debts in kind when they have the opportunity. These are the people who deserve success."

The agricultural class has come to know this, that the return to prosperity of the world comes through them—that their products are what will pull the world out of a slump, that they stand at the foundation of prosperity. The action of legislatures in many countries proves that this conviction is being realized that better prices for farm products will lift the rest of the world.

LIGHT ON SOCIAL DISEASES

The coming to Belleville of the epoch-making and thought-evoking film "The End of the Road" Wednesday for a three-day and night showing at the Capitol Theatre in the interests of the anti-venereal disease campaign of the Canadian Social-Hygiene Council is an event which should be welcomed by every person of adult age and especially by parents who should realize that here is presented a true-to-life story which may possibly save many from pitfalls, which lurk for the offenders and the innocent. For over a decade this work has been going on in Canada with success and this film is calculated to aid and abet the work of the Council in stressing the facts of life. Practically all of Canada has specific legislation in the provinces dealing with social diseases. Facts show that the incidence of the disease which was very marked in hospitals has been falling in a large degree through the campaign carried on not only by the courts and by the social legislation of the provinces.

Canada has been, it is satisfactory to be able to say, an exception to the generally accepted dictum of the tendency to the increase of social diseases after every great war, thanks to the Dominion-wide interest in the campaign.

Prevention of diseases is better than cure of diseases and with no diseases is this more true than with these public menaces of social diseases, originally the mark of somebody's sin, which blight falls on sinner and often on the innocent. To cure all the ills of the people of Canada a staggering amount of money is required in the form of taxation, loss of time from work and medical bills. And yet out of a billion and a third which this country spends yearly on cures of sickness and accidents seven millions are expended on prevention. Of this seven million, a much smaller part, is in aid of the prevention of such diseases as those treated in this film.

There are some things in life which are not pleasant and yet they must be faced. "The End of the Road" treats of some of these facts in a sane and healthy way.

The tragedy of it lies not only in the wrong which spreads these distressing social diseases but in the accumulation of innocent victims as well as in those helplessly caught in the meshes of the dread maladies, who do not know that these are curable.

For the sake of the innocent and for the cure of the victims the greatest publicity in regard to these diseases and their ravages is desirable. This is the reason why the showing in Belleville of this film is so far-reaching in its possibilities of good.

In addition there will be medical pictured and addresses by qualified speakers.

NONE CAN DOUBT

The world is so shrim with ecstasy
On any sun-sweet, wind-washed April day,
Life's tides so strongly rising in each tree,
So surely pulsing through each robin's lay
That none can doubt the wisdom of the plan
Which paints such beauty on a wayside flower,
And through unnumbered springs since time began
Have given to countless birds song's lovely dower.

Oh, every tiny pattern that is traced
Is with such infinite precision placed,
Each note so tinted, so exceeding well,
None can deny the whole vast scheme must be
As perfect as the little part men see!

AMERICA'S SWEDEHEART, as Greta Garbo has been christened by Walter Winchell, newspaper columnist, is not contemplating an immediate return to the United States, but is evidently thinking along that line, according to W. SETH PARKER has had to retire from his radio engagements on account of ill health, having been advised by his physician to take a good rest. Here it is again, the tired business man may work ten to twenty-four hours a day and finally suffer a breakdown. FOLKS ARE PRETTY MUCH THE SAME all over the continent, with the same likes and dislikes; and few there be who forget the hymns of childhood, the hymns my mother sang. Hence it is not surprising that in the ten most popular gospel hymns picked out by a radio audience of many thousands all over the United States and Canada there should be found a similarity of tastes. Nine of the ten were sung at the broadcast last Sunday night from the little town of Northport, Maine, and were topped by "The Old Rugged Cross," favorite hymn of thousands. "The Church in the Valley" and "Whispering Hope" came next. Then "Lead Kindly Light," "Abide With Me," "In the Garden," "Nearer, Still Nearer," "Rock of Ages", "Let the Lower Lights be Burning," "Nearer My God to Thee."

Buried at least 2,500 years, a stone tablet was recently unearthed on the Aegean coast which bore an inscription, a free complaint of a mother about her schoolboy son. Translated, it read:

"His marbles are polished with use, but he scarcely knows where the schoolhouse is. And when he tosses his waxed tablets aside to recite a piece, he squeezes the words out as though through a sieve. When we scold him, he runs away to his grandmother."

CONTAGION OF MUMPS HIGH SAYS EXPERT

Poison Which Causes Mumps Virile But Unknown

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Physiology.

Mumps is one of the most highly-contagious diseases known. Despite this fact, if one child in a family contracts the disorder—in school, let us say—it is miraculous if his brothers and sisters escape.

The glands affected in mumps are the salivary glands. Usually it is the parotid that is first affected, that gland which is situated at the side of the head, back of the jaw bones swollen and a lump is seen, an imaginary one, when one looks from the lobe of the ear would run right through the middle of the swelling.

After a parotid gland becomes introved it is soon the other side just under and in front of the ear, is sure also to be affected within a few days later. The sublingual gland and the submaxillary—likewise organs that secrete saliva, sometimes become enlarged also, but this is not the rule.

Exactly what the poison or germ may be that causes mumps remains unknown. Suffice it to say that whatever it is, it is proved to be virile. One can say indeed more of other persons. Direct contact, such as actual kissing, is not contemplating an immediate return to the United States, but is evidently thinking along that line, according to W. W. reveries over wire. Greta, however, cannot see the cut, any way she looks—what fifty per cent. cut from the gross Garbo? Never! Make it one hundred per cent. and I ban stay in Sveden.

Dr. Stock's Daily Health Hint

Heartburn is a common complaint and may be caused by too strong food, to eating hastily or to an upset stomach or nerves. Some persons cannot digest certain foods and, when they do not avoid them, the resulting gas forces the stomach valve down. Ice-water during meals may also produce this symptom. Where constipation is present it should be corrected. In short, find the cause for heartburn, and remove it.

HORSE SHOW ABANDONED

Financial Losses Has Forced Shareholders To Decision

London, March 28 (C.P. Cable)—The famous International Horse Show in London has been abandoned for this year.

It is said the show has been one of the foremost of its kind in the world but financial losses in recent years have forced the shareholders in the company which has promoted the show to wind up their affairs.

For a time it was thought that Lord Lonsdale, Britain's premier sporting character and owner of the widely-known horse fancier, might lend needed financial support, but which during pre-war years used to attract thousands to London from foreign countries.

It was announced definitely, however, the show would be abandoned for this year.

Close to 80,000 Irish Free State children will receive free meals during the incoming year this year by Winding up general authorities according to T. Bower, postmaster.

Routine Business Occupies Attention of City Council at Regular Meeting of Board

Discussion on Motion But is Referred to Committee

GRANT TO V. O. N.

On a motion introduced by Alderman Bell, seconded by Alderman Ellis, the Public Works suggesting, that residents of one year and over be given preference in the work to be passed be placed on a list, that applicants be registered at the relief station, when workmen are required was referred to the Board of Works at the City Council on Monday night. The mover and seconder Alderman Sale and Alderman Ellis are on the relief committee, which will deal with the matter. The Board will hold a special meeting to be held on Tuesday and the list prepared by the latter will be bring down in their report, a recommendation embodying the suggestion of the motion has been passed.

Alderman Donaldson in speaking of the motion stated that it was unworkable for he believed, that in the first instance the married man should be given preference and always the men first in are used to not the first men in line of relief is necessary, to get the work done quickly, and the single men in a while time. "If a list is used", said Alderman Donaldson, "you are always on hand and the City Foreman is obliged to take the men on the list, and you may be away and the foreman should not be hampered in his work. Besides I believe that well the thing is organized, there would be no trouble. Some weeks ago the sewerat storm of the Bridge street sewer was flooded and burned out. There were only 30 men wanted and they were not available at the relief station, but had to be, so he could get. The foreman does not know who the men live in in the city, some-time ago the council went on record to pay for a couple of periods and no one man was given more than he deserved. There are 30 men on the relief station in the city is a picnic. I actually saw five men working on the sewerage job, I took nearly half an hour and could not find a man to ask for a light. Seven minutes. Some just want a job and hang on as long as they can. I believe that there is a way of trying to cause friction but the plan could not be worked out. I am in favor of workable something else could be done."

Alderman Sharpe, "I have had the same experience as Alderman Donaldson has been shown on certain jobs and it is time we got away from that sort of thing."

Alderman Donahue "Some are only too willing to abandon a job, one man but I am not interested in any one man, the council has given my service to the city and as long as I am in the public works department I intend to do my best to serve you."

Alderman Armstrong, "I have before me a list of those, who are seeking employment of the city and they number 50, who are out of work and on relief. I have had to help them and have helped to pay for most of the improvements this city has had in the past few years and if there's any extra work, I am for the man, that is in necessity. I am the city, I sympathize with the man out of a job but not still the man never meeting his fine. We are holding a meeting to go over this question and this is there to be done, from said meeting a recommendation, that will be of some benefit."

At this point K. J. Baldrey asked if he might address the Board and given permission stated that he was in accord with the statement of Alderman Armstrong. At this point the motion was given back to the clerk and Alderman Bell and Brickman were added to the committee.

Grant To V. O. N.

Fred W. Sanville, president of the V.O.N. and Dr. Ellis Ponton, a member of the committee appeared before the council and laid before the board of their usual to this organization and explained their reasons for asking for a grant this year, stated the committee and more visits were made, that in 1931 there were 1038 more visits in 1932 than in the previous year and altogether made 8,161 visits during the past year. He also told of the V.O.N. helping the M.O.H. and visiting 1035 people for disease and told of the special feature of the V.O.N. work, that of caring for the expectant mother. Dr. Ponton stated that there were 71 still born babes in 1932 and not one mother was in the care of the V.O.N. Mr. Mackarin also thanked the council for past favors and stated that they were now operating the strictest economy and the money was now needed. A grant of $600.00 for the time being was made, much appreciated by the committee.

A lawyer also appeared before the council asking for certain consideration and was given a favorable hearing. He stated he sympathized with the council in their efforts and was only present to offer helpful criticism. He said that more attention be paid to the industries now in the city than inducing others to come in and more incentive to the unemployed to grow food stuffs, pointing out what he had experienced there. "In what extent has lodging and also rental been paid during the past unemployment season for those who could not secure work?" and "How about Taxes for those, who are conformable to possess property in their own name, and how many unable to keep up the taxes because of failure to have employment? and "Can any facilities always be given for getting secured loans from the banks to aide over this situation?" Dealing with the lots for the growing of food stuffs, the lawyer asked what arrangements were being made for this year and Alderman Bell, chief of the spokesman, that the unemployed could have lots. Whether they would be made free or not, he was thinking that would have to be taken up. The City Solicitor also stated the questions asked would be dealt with.

Tenders Are Called.

Tenders were asked for the collection of garbage, the present contract expiring, Workmen's compensation and public liability insurance. The tenders will be received up till the day before the next committee meeting. A set of scales for $21.75 was ordered purchased from the Smith Hardware Company. A resolution from Windsor council seeking beer and wine by the glass in the hotels of the province was referred back for consideration. The by-law for the appointment of the Rev. A. L. Cosh and Mrs. Gem.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

CHAPTER IV

Visit an hour later Betty put her head into the library door; Miss Trumbull was just going. She had several letters in her hand and a leather briefcase under one arm.

"It seems a shame not to give you some dinner," Betty said vaguely. She was annoyed by not knowing exactly what one did under the circumstances. Immediately she added, "Can't Pete's here, and Fred Parker and Jack Dunn. There'y all going to stay to dinner."

"Oh-no!" Miss Trumbull said reaching for his cane, limping to the door with both women. Pretty sitting Miss Trumbull to the train, is that all right by you?" he asked his wife, all right by you?" he asked his wife, "Oh, quite. But I'm afraid you'll not get into town until nearly 9, Miss Trumbull."

Sandra raised her golden-brown eyes from her book. "I know we could get to Chester this again, but I wish you'd listen to reason. The girls have just been telling me that there is talking Barbara and Cathleen in January, and Louise when she's going, too, and asking Mamma."

"Oh-no!"

"To Europa Cart, of course!"

"Oh, is that so?" Carr asked idly. But his mouth hardened a little.

"Louise doesn't have to ask any one," she said darkly. Betty went on cheerfully, "She's divorced, she can do as she likes! She's going to Paris, Hamilton apartment on the Ile St. Louis—sounds too sacredical! As far from she says Will lets her do just whatever she thinks best."

There was a pause. Then Carter said shortly:

"But it would be for only a year, Sandra. And Paley really needs some one who can go on with her social work. Pellegrini is all very well, but he can't give her the gentlewoman she needs. And it is very for her to go."

"It doesn't seem to me it would be for her good, She might be terribly unhappy over there." His tone was determined; they had often been over the ground before.

"She wouldn't be! She'd adore it." Betty dropped into a chair frowning.

Carter stretched out his hand to take her free hand; fingering over the chair arm; she jerked it, petulantly away.

"No use for me, hein?" he asked, smiling a little.

"It isn't that; I'm disappointed," Betty answered shortly.

"Can't," she asked suddenly, "who's Miss Trumbull?"

For a minute his heavy, dark brows went up in surprise. Then he laughed.

"One of the girls from the office."

"I never saw her there," Betty commented.

"She's been with us about a year, or so, I guess."

"She's a beautiful creature," Betty commented thoughtfully. And in an absent tone she added, "Why never marries that girl will have all the affection he wants! Carr," she continued idly, "why didn't you marry some girl like Miss Trumbull?"

He was too genuinely surprised to show the annoyance and the slight sense of shock her words stirred in him.

"Why on earth do you say that?"

"Doesn't Miss Trumbull strike you as the affectionate sort?" Betty asked innocently.

"Does she you?"

"And your father — was he an actor, too?"

"Oh, heavens!" his wife exclaimed. "Did you hear that, Fred? Carr can see it. She was just born to spoil some man, wait for him, feed his pipe and his slippers! I have no affection for Miss Trumbull? as affair with Miss Trumbull?

"Well, I won't!" Carter said shortly.

"Well," Betty admitted, "I don't suppose you will!"

There was a silence. Then Carter said deliberately:

"My God, I don't know where you women think you get off, some times! I suppose you'll be sorry to death to have me fall for some other woman!"

"Well," Betty persisted unabashed, "you can't deny I believe, of course of course, that you're married. Did perhaps you could take her to lunch somewhere— I don't know! Some quiet, inexpensive-looking person!"

She gathered her draperies to her and rose. Carter's face darkened to put a butterfly kiss in the top of his dark hair as she went out. Carter caught at her hand and drew her down for closer embrace, but with the light little laugh he knew so well she disengaged herself and was gone.

CHAPTER V

A week passed before Carter saw Miss Trumbull again. He felt he was absurd in his office, dividing his attention between a heap of letters and the ever-ringing telephone, when a familiar voice said thickly, "Mr. Carter, you would like you to O.K. this, Mr. Carvendish," and Miss Trumbull was standing on the other side of the desk. Carter bade Miss Trumbull Carter said, surprised to feel a sudden and confusion in his pulses.

She answered something of course, and he said something more himself.

Rest her gold-brown eyes said much more than her words; there was friendliness in the tones of her voice, appeal in the beauty of her shining hair, her transparent skin, her white throat.

He thought of the girl at intervals throughout the day, remembering her clear, flushed face, with the light shadowing and strongly arched and the disarming quality of her smile. He remembered her aside to Miss Curtis, "Don't worry about it, Gertrude, it was my fault." The significant phrase took on laughter and mystification when her memory what it meant, but he remained it a hundred times, said in the clear, low, English voice.

Two days later, going through the almost empty office at 4 o'clock he saw Sandra, alone at her desk; and stopped to speak to her.

"Aren't you through yet?"

"I haven't had my lunch. I'm just going."

"Come and have lunch with me," he said, without premeditation. The words surprised him as much as they did her. His new duties kept him very busy, and now her color came up. "I shouldn't have asked her," Carter thought, "and she shouldn't come."

But she had risen to her feet. "Thank you; I'd love to," she said. "This is pleasant!" Carter cheerfully when they were seated in one of the big luncheon rooms in a popular hotel. He had instinctively brought her to the place where he usually lunched; the conviction of having acted rather hastily and unwisely was strong upon him; he must avoid the appearances of saying clandestine.

Sandra, he thought, was lovely in the mellow shadows of the little room; there was a faint flush of excitement on her cheek; her dark lashes and under her brown hat.

Carter wondered what she was thinking. Had he surprised her, or was she so entirely ignorant of convention that she considered this perfectly natural? At all events she was taking it simply. She observed that she was starving and ordered quickly and definitely. He liked her here once, a year ago at least, she smiled, "and they had the most delicious chocolate cake! —sort of square," she explained to the waiter. "with cream inside".

The waiter nodded; wrote.

"My income," said Sandra, looking at her companion, "does not run to dinners here. But a man named Kate, — a theatre manager, brought Fleet—brought my mother and me here to talk about something."

She had been rather silent as they walked the few blocks from the office; so silent that Carter had wondered if she were regretting their little adventure. He was enchanted with this change in her mood. Her self-possession, her poise, her assurance, her air of authority, her ease with waiters, her knowledge of the menu, all were delightful.

"Is your name English?" Carter asked, with a little interest.

"Yes, I suppose so," she asked surprised.

"I meant your own name."

"Oh, Alexandra? Alexandra Mary Fox Trumbull," she supplied, very promptly.

"An British as the British Isles," Carter said.

Walking back after lunch they talked of books; the conversation had reached a great deal. When they were going up in the big office building she said she must go on up to the filing department and left him with one grateful nod and smile for thanks and good-by.

He got off at his own office floor with a sense of having done something at once stupid and decent.

Upon sober second thought Carter rather wondered about the whole performance.

Just before Christmas Miss Carvendish was, by all accounts, very ill indeed. Carter felt constrained and he saw that her face was thin and pale and her color high. He thought that when Carvendish returned it would be a long time before he saw Miss Trumbull any where, again.

It had been done on an impulse; a very foolish one.

Well, I don't know. It never Sandra chewed her pencil. "I never had much of a future for me."

"And your father— was he an actor, too?"

"No; my father was a lawyer, a man who came out here, I think," Sandra smiled, speaking more naturally now and with her direct look—"I think his family paid him to come. I haven't much to say about my father. I think that was it. He died a rench, and my mother went down to a little town near it starting in a stock company, and that's how they met. After he died somebody came over from England and settled with mother and stayed at the ranch. She rents it now. Fanny said," she added "that, from the look she got at my father's photo she would have said a hard drug pounds a quarter to get away from them!"

It was the first touch of humor he had seen in her; Carter laughed joyfully.

"Is your name English?"

"Yes, I suppose so," she asked surprised.

"I meant your own name."

Mrs. Julian and Bunky Moore have returned from Toronto, where they attended the Provincial Conservatory of the Heintzman Co., at the Royal York Hotel.

Conversion of religious profession took place on Saturday, speaking of the new novitiate of the Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence, Kingston, at nine o'clock. His Excellency, Most Rev. M. J. O'Brien, officiated and among the clergy of the diocese present was Rt. Rev. J. P. Hudson, V.G.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hall honoured them at a delightful miscellaneous shower on Monday evening. The guests met first at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hall before assembling at the residence of the bride and groom, Thirty-five were present and the bride, who was completely taken by surprise, was presented with a lay figure and white bag of gifts. These included lovely presents of china, linen and silver. During the evening an address was read and the wishes of their friends was read by Mr. Charles Stevenson. A dainty lunch was served and an orchestra supplied music for dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Thrasher, 182 Victoria Avenue, are at present at home to a number of their relatives and friends and the occasion proved to be one of rare enjoyment for all in attendance. Cards playing was indulged in by a number present, while others indulged in the light fantastic. Appropriate music was furnished for the pastimes and dancing until late. Later in the evening a delicious lunch was served. The immediate cause of all present was that Mr. Thrasher and Mrs. Thrasher were ideal host and hostess.

Beauty . . . . By Helen Jameson

Don't Let The Wa istline Matire

If a woman can keep young at the waist, she can keep young all over, spiritually as well as physically. That disheartening upbraiding sounds the deathknell of the waist opposite. Come in the girlish under-25 curve so vital to anatomical perfection then the waistline territory just under the arms to the hip bone is a straight story. It is not conducive to beauty Hope.

From hall is sometimes an inheritance, in which event a woman needs, chances are that dangerous age more, of a waistline than a waistline, chances are that she will follow right along—unless she has an observing eye and a will to combat the shortcomings, begins early the fight against expansion.

The fighting can be fun, turned to a diversion, a pastime. Start planning the battle against the middle-aged shape it is only necessary to turn one's interests in the direction of outdoor sports, to the delights of active circulation and light, strong muscles as well as the pleasures of the sun rights.

Correct posture is a part of the game of youth preservation. Maybe you're tired of posture preaching. Maybe some over zealous friend had offered a willing ear. In time poor posture gets you. A humpy shoulder, the shoeliner, the back sacks grow, the chest does not, a tummy expands; and even the prettiest frock in the shop isn't becoming because it won't look like anything if it isn't carried spectacularly.

There's many a woman on the wrong side of sixty who sheds Alice with spirit. Her back is straight, does a neat and pretty zip in at the waistline. There's no sagging, no stumping, no slumping forward of shoulders. If you could corner her, ask her how come, demand her secret, she will tell you, invariably, that she has kept her waistline, one way or another, that she does it daily. Because it is her secret and because it makes her feel chirpy and attractive, starts the day right.

In cold weather she walks, has her morning setting up exercises. In mild or fine days swims, rows a boat if she has a chance. Almost invariably she has some pet, favorite sport that she considers her own. She has the knack of making it strenuous, but if a woman has to be born it somewhere in muscular activities, she can still keep in the air, but the ball over the net.

Perhaps because this younger generation's activity-minded bent on looking pretty, the feminine shape is changing. Hips, bust lines and graceful movement into middle age are becoming so passe, why it shouldn't.

One has to remember that the girl's mental attitude is necessary. If a woman is intellectual, serious, ought to settle down with the carnations and the new detective story, she's in a sticky matter to live up an interest in Mister Active Sports. Her interests be to other. But if she will stop to think that the ball game, the hike, the canoe paddle, the golf stick, when organized hips and tummy start, there's likelihood of her looking like a perambulating davenport, may be she'll consider a march with to by being calm this slender, rowdy outline.

WHEAT MART IS VERY DULL

Prices Slightly Off in Midday Trading at Winnipeg

Winnipeg, March 28.—(CP)—Early dealings on the Winnipeg grain exchange today were dull, in contrast to yesterday's dull session as uninterested buying either exposed or selling influence, slowly eased under lack of demand. Wheat at the opening Tuesday was almost entirely nominal, prices displayed no interest in transactions.

Half-way through the forenoon session prices were 1-8 cent lower, May option @ 1-4, July @ 1-4 and October 3-8 cents. As in yesterday's trading, sales were few and far between today. Only one or two trades were in the pits and even they did little damage.

No overnight export business was reported. Trading at Liverpool was quiet and sometimes near the close were 1-8d to 3-8d lower. Canadian and Argentine offers there were said to be cheaper but demand was slow. Corn at Chicago was unchanged.

MORE CRICKET TO BE PLAYED

Trophy Offered For Ontario to Increase Popularity of Sport

TORONTO—Inter-county cricket, such as has flourished in the old country for so many years, is to be introduced into Ontario. With a view to encouraging the playing of cricket throughout the province the plans are rapidly assuming definite form that will feature inter-county matches during the coming season. It is believed that the final plan for county cricket tournaments arranged in Canada.

A well-organized effort, which is receiving the support of such organized cricket bodies as are now extant, has been launched to enlist the interest of clubs throughout each county for the formation of an inter-county series of matches. A. C. Matthews, Conservative member of the Federal parliament for Toronto East Centre is now promoting and in cricket circles throughout the province he has met with much success in his campaign to secure the co-operation of the cricketers throughout the Dominion. They believe there are several counties in which a number of high calibre scattered through the counties who are at present not playing at all. The new scheme, it is hoped will prevent these men to form the nucleus of county cricket teams and encourage the advent of more players to the game.

Details as to how the inter-county competition will be organized are not yet been completed.

There are no less than seventeen counties in the province of Ontario ready, being played by one or more clubs. Wentworth county is especially strong. The following counties, it is understood, are within that list and should have no difficulty in participating immediately: Essex, York, Kent, Lincoln, Welland, Elgin, Brant, Wentworth, Middlesex, Oxford, Perth. That group could be divided, it is thought for the purposes of four counties each for the progress of primary competition. In its first year, it is suggested, the new circuit might be confined to the counties of Wentworth, Halton, York, Peterborough and Victoria with Toronto more or less isolated. The sponsors believe the most successful of the eventual sections competing four counties each should be competitively easy. Only after the preliminary round of competition have been received, however, can this part of the county cricket program be completed.

Should every county be represented in which cricket is played, the clearing out of temporary contenders (because of expense and distance travelling entailed) the declaring of the champion more or less would involve, all told, four series of play-offs.

It is unlikely players in Toronto clubs will be permitted to play for the Trophy in their own city, though probable provision covering counties within easy reach of metropolitan areas is to confine the membership of county teams to such clubs as do not maintain teams in the cities which have more than a stated quota of organized teams. In this way strong city organizations will be kept from playing.

Mr. Matthews was president of Toronto Cricket Club, one of the oldest sports organizations and most prominent club in the Dominion, for fifty years, and is keen on the subject. Principal H. G. Griffith of Ridley College, always has been an enthusiastic cricketer, and W. H. Moore is also a great lover and staunch supporter of cricket who is keenly interested in developing the county idea. Other prominent citizens throughout the province are identified with the movement and they have undertaken to heartily support it in their respective counties.

WATCH BABIES IS APPEAL

Safety Council of Australia Gives Some Useful Hints

MELBOURNE — The National Safety Council of Australia has issued in letters a special appeal to women everywhere. The last father and mother to the frequency of needless accidents to children due to the careless handling of matches and the raising boiling water or other liquids. A common cause of such accidents is the practice of putting boiling water into the bath and then turning away to obtain towels, or to get cold water to add to the hot water instead of pumping in cold water first. A child recently swallowed the safety pin which clothed its baby in "swaddling" and died. Why a "comfort" at all? The Safety Council raises specially to the dangers of petrol. Matches given with petrol, and a case is cited in which the cleaning of silk gloves led to severe burning. The risk is equally great with any kind of gloves, and with any material if it is rubbed when wet with petrol. Petrol should never be allowed to approach one who finds a substitute for petrol in cleaning. One accident is enough and there are few materials used for cleaning which will not do so. Petrol will neither fade nor shrink when washed; some form of home cleaning is therefore necessary. Then there is the danger of inhaling the fumes, which may have serious effects. It is important to do all cleaning out of doors. The price of safety is constant vigilance and care.

WOMAN'S DUTY IS TO VOTE

Isabella Scott Writes One of Her Trenchant Letters Again

MONTREAL—Isabella Scott writes one of her trenchant letters again in the local press.

"The following extract from a letter recently received from the Duchess of Hamilton Cassell a good friend of Dahlia, shows the attitude of the Pontiff: The Pope, when asked his opinion on woman suffrage, replied: 'That it was not only a question of a woman's right to vote, but that it was her duty to vote and take part in all her nation's life'. The late Pope speaking on the question said: 'Yes, as opposed we should like to see women electors everywhere. In New Zealand, where women have had the vote since 1893, Archbishop Redland has this to say: 'Women have had the vote in New Zealand for many years, and it has been proved that they use the franchise wisely and well for the common good. All my sympathies are with the movement and I believe that the progress of equal suffrage will never be arrested. The women of New Zealand have maintained a high type of purity and cleanliness and further-more are better wives and homes-keepers because of the vote.'

"Is it merely a coincidence that New Zealand leads the world in social reform? The intensity of crime rate is the lowest in the world, 36 per 1,000 at last report and steadily going down. The enfranchised women of New Zealand have secured by their vote all the reforms the women of Quebec (mainly the suffragists) have been working for for many years, such as mothers' allowance, old age pensions, assistance in maternity, care of mental defectives, playgrounds, recreation dance halls, policewomen, and many other things."

BORN WITHOUT TAIL

LONDON—A thoroughbred without a tail has been foaled at the Banstead Manor Stud at Newmarket. But he is a strong and healthy colt. His sire is Cornedon, winner of the Derby in 1926, and his dam is Fair Aberdonian, who won the Singleton Handicap at Goodwood in 1928. Professor Robertson, one of the foremost thoroughbred breeding experts, told a reporter: "If the colt is normal otherwise, the mere fact that he has no tail should not prevent his racing."

For the merely average music is not a profession—it is starvation.—Josef Hoffmann.

OLD PICTURE IS PRICELESS

Painted by Teacher of Famous Dutch Painter

CHICAGO—There's a chance of turning a gift into a clear profit of perhaps $60,000 here, and it's getting begging. It has to do with a painting which since 1911 has hung in an Schaumburg, Ill., home with hundreds of others in the galleries of the Chicago Art Institute.

Until now the world has credited it with being the work of the Dutch artist, Jacob Ostervelt who lived from 1635 to 1709. Then Lt. Charles Wallach, the English critic, happened along and declared it was from the brush of his master, Johannes Verneer of Delt, teacher of Ostervelt. Immediately the canvas, known as "The Mustachan", began to rise in value, for while an Ostervelt is not to be classed a Verneer is a positive treasure. Noce is included in the Institute's collection.

But, least profited of all is Dr. Robert H. Hinkle, director of the Institute. He's accustomed to such things and has turned down offers of $40,000, $50,000 and $60,000 for a $1,000,000 for a $51,000 work.

Now, however, he's interested in art for its sake and not as a financial investment. He said today, and as an after-thought added, "Perhaps the world would be better off if it had no money as a yard."

For the present "The Musician" will continue to carry its 1911 brass tag identifying it as an Ostervelt. The marker will not be changed to a Verneer until all doubt as to its authenticity has been removed, and that is up to the critics, Dr. Hinkle said.

DRIVE ORGANIZED TO SAVE NURSE'S SCHOOL

Plan Now In Operation Provides Five Years' Funds.

MONTREAL—In order to save the School for Graduate Nurses at McGill University from temporary extinction because of hard times, the alumnae association has drawn organized, placed their shoulders resolutely to the task and promised to look after the finances of the school for a period of five years, starting next January. Graduate nurses are found in many centres in the Dominion, with a central group here, and an appeal is being made to citizens everywhere to aid the nurses in their effort. The organization which they consider essential to the well-being of the profession, and so to the public as a whole.

All amongst of the way the nurses feel about the school are shown in the offer of Miss Bertha Harmer, head of the school, to donate her services free for one year. The first step to be taken by the Montreal committee is to organize a letter drive which it is hoped to realize about $15,000. Mrs. Norman Cairine Wilson, is taking an active interest, assisted by Miss Ethel Johnston, and also Dr. Helen MacMurchy, head of the Dominion Department of Child Hygiene.

CAPTAIN BERNIER IS STILL VIRILE DESPITE HIS AGE

Weatherbeaten Mariner Who Sailed Uncharted Seas Now Lecture

MONTREAL—Many men cherish secret hopes of living to the century mark but Captain J. E. Bernier, the octogenarian French-Canadian seaman who is credited with charting more islands for the British Empire than any other man, openly declares that is the mark he is out to reach.

Hardships have only served to harden the weather-beaten frame of this mariner who sailed the seas for more than half a century and who today is equal to physical feats that would beat many men of half his age.

Short and stout, his hair bushy and white, Captain Bernier is still game for anything. He retired from the sea in 1877 but fairly brisk scent of 40 stairs won't take his breath away today. Cultural pursuits are now occupying his time. A Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, he is lecturing on the "Conquest of the Arctic", in which he took such an active part.

Born at L'Islet, Que., 81 years ago, he was only 20 when he became captain of a Liverpool ship that took him across the seven seas. For more than 20 years he sailed this merchant vessel and then offered his services to Queen Victoria to head expeditions to the Arctic. Many of the islands directly to the north of Canada were discovered and charted by him. To him also goes credit for discovering the remnants of the ill-fated Franklin expedition to the Arctic.

His was on his way to the North Pole aboard the 1904 expedition from the Department of Marine compelled him to abandon the expedition and patrol the Atlantic coast in search of rum-runners. "Even in those days we had to be on the watch for them," he commented.

Captain Bernier has the distinction of going farther north than any other Canadian.

"JOLLY ROGER" ONE OF BEST IN LONDON

Reminds Theatre Goers of the Days of Old Savoy.

LONDON—"Jolly Roger", a musical burlesque now running at the Savoy Theatre, London, is one of the most brilliant things of the kind the London stage has seen since the old Savoy days according to the critic R. A. Bangham. Walter Leigh, the author, is hailed as a second Sir Arthur Sullivan, of Gilbert and Sullivan fame. He is said to have the gift of melody, scores charmingly and can make use of the old idioms with great effect. "Here, at last, is an English composer who can write light music which has style and finish," says the critic. "Yes, a second Sullivan is not too high praise." The "Jolly Roger" is being presented by Rita John and the actor and comic vocalist George Robey, who are the partnership for this presentation.

FISH RECOMMENDED FOR HEALTH'S SAKE

Most Valuable Food and Should Be Eaten Often.

OTTAWA—Fish is one of our most valuable foods, and the consumption of greater quantities than are now in use is advisable from the standpoint of nutrition and the prevention of rickets and goitre," states Dr. J. A. Ahearn, Deputy Minister, Department of Pensions and National Health.

"Fish and meat", says Dr. Ahearn, "contain the same nutritive constituents, namely, proteins and fats. The protein of fish is essentially the same as that of meats, and is equally as a diet for the young, nutritious. As the muscle fibre of fish is shorter than that of meat, fish is more easily assimilated and digested. Fish, in addition, contains vitamins and is especially rich in vitamin D, which is so necessary for the development of bone. The use of vitamin D prevents rickets. The existence of vitamin D in fish oils suggests the importance of fish as a diet for the young.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN "CENTRAL PARK" AT THE BELLE

"Central Park", a First national picture, featuring Dorothy Mackaill and Wallace Ford, has been scheduled for presentation at the local theatre's program coming to the Belle, Thursday.

It is stated that it catches a true section of the varnished life that pulses daily through New York City's great playground. It is a straight love story and the vivid colering of its cosmopolitan life and environment is the screen at its loveliest.

Central Park has buried in its bosom many secret romances, more known than spread proclaim, but Hidden tragedies, probably than any spot in the world. The city's only countryside, Ward Morehouse, dramatic New York columnist and columnist, who has watched the flow of life through its gates for over a year, has chosen to set forth one of the most thrilling love affairs and find excuse to bear to tragedy.

There is a happier side to the picture, with a panoramic view of passing events, composed now and with that of "Times Depot" and "Grand Hotel." Like these pictures the entire action takes place in a single central location, all within the sound of the nearby Bowery.

To break taking thrills are said to buckskin pants for an emergency. Then, a hunt for a lunatic keeper, a thief chase, a kidnapping, a wedding and other exciting incidents.

Other important players in the cast include Guy Kibbee, Lionel D. Wallhall, Patricia Ellis, Charles Sellon, Spencer Charters, John Wray, DeWitt Jennings and Nicholas Herbay.

Thrilling Thrills in Browse

"From Hell to Heaven" a drama which pases into the intimate thoughts and secret lives of a group of people who makes up one of the small sections of a crowd of thousand attending the running of a famous derby, is announced as the second feature offering on the same program. Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie, David Manners and Verree Teasdale are the stars. The picture is from a story by Lawrence Hazard, well known writer.

The lives, the hopes and the thoughts of these eleven are curiously tangled together as the time for the race draws near, and yet each stakes his entire career on a different horse. The picture reaches a powerful climax during the running of the derby, which is said to be filmed upon which furious is the smile.

Raven Mackenzie as Stream

The many Belleville admirers of Jack Pearl, Glenn Miller, Ben Bernie, Radio fans, will be delighted to learn that he is appearing on the same program in a very funny and clever comedy, "The Mad Ticket". The Bell Canadian News, with its "Belleville-ana" will be on display exhibited on the same program.

"CAVALCADE" REPEAT FILM IN YEARS

"Cavalcade" at the Belle tonight and Wednesday, matinee and evening is a picture you cannot afford to miss.

Noel Coward chose a daring theme and the daring of the person was even greater in presenting it. That such daring was amply justified, however, was proved by the enthusiasm of those who saw it. The picture "Cavalcade" is one of the greatest ever to come to the screen.

Diana Wynyard Magnificent

Most of the principals will be new to Belleville screen audiences, although the all-star cast contains such familiar names as Olive Brook, Herbert Mundin, Beryl Mercer, Tempe Pigeon, John Warburton, Margaret Seddon and Frank Atkinson as Billy Bevan.

Diana Wynyard in the role of Jane Marryot, gives a magnificent performance which marks her as Hollywood's great "character" actress of real years. Brook fir exceeds the best work he has ever done before in a picture while the performances of Mundin and Tha O'Connor in character roles are notable contributions t screen perfection.

Theme Song and Frank Lawton, who carry the young love interest are very capable performers. Miss Jeans being specially effective in her singing of the "Everlasting Oneness" from Brooke. Merle Oberon and others of the large cast add greatly to the enjoyment of the picture.

Frank Lloyd's direction leaves nothing to be desired. He has shown a complete grasp of his subject and proves again that he rightly ranks among the very first of Hollywood directors.

We nominate "Cavalcade" as the best of the "real pictures of the year," for many years past and many to come.

NEW FRUIT COMES TO CANADIAN MART

Montreal—Canadians are going to have an opportunity of securing the strange fruit "ichi" a consignment of which is on its way to Saint John, New Brunswick, from South Africa, according to Canadian National Railways officials.

The fruit is about one and a half inches in diameter, with a thin brittle red shell having rough protuberances. Inside are the seeds which name the fruit is known in the Orient, is a native of Southern China, and is one of the most important indigenous fruits. It is also cultivated in India and an organization has been formed in South Africa to develop the fruit there, which is frequently made into preserves.

FISH-WAYS ENABLE FISH TO RISE 60 FT.

Montreal—The installation of a fish-way in the Kokshak River, British Columbia, to make it easier for coho and chinook salmon and steelhead trout to reach the spawning grounds in the upper reaches of this river, draws attention to the fish-way in the Mercey River, a noted salmon stream in Nova Scotia, which overcomes a height of 60 feet and is understood to be the greatest height thus surmounted anywhere in the world, according to the Fish and Game Department of the Canadian National Railways. These fish-ways, which were installed by the Dominion Department of Fisheries, have proved of great benefit in helping to maintain fish stocks. Chinook, coho and steelheads have frequently in the past been known to fail to get past the Kokshak Falls on their way upstream to the spawning grounds and the fish-way has been constructed to overcome this difficulty.

FIRST NIGHT IN FILMLAND

"Air Hostess" Introduces New Male-beauty to Cinema.

Dramatic Turns of Plot

"The Air Hostess" which opened at the Capitol Theatre on Monday afternoon has introduced to the cinema audiences a new profession, that of the stewardess and conductor of huge airliners which sweep across the country. The profession is limited only thirty-five girls and women being able to find posts of this kind, and Evelyn Knapp who plays the title role in the "Air Hostess" gives an impression of the duties which the office requires. Air hostesses are graduate nurses and have all the contact with the passengers.

This film is also interesting in the attention it brings to bear upon a young actor who has risen rapidly in the ranks of film stars, James Murray. His is a type of rugged manliness which suits the profession of pilot and which opens up endless dramatic possibilities in the turn of the plot.

It is a love story with the traditional rough course which the lovers pursue. There is the dramatic incident of the fight, then there is the air journey escapade to a cloth. Thelma Todd as the designing widow almost wrecks the young married life of the heroine and hero, and the discovery drives the wife away on a train which is speeding towards a bridge which has been swept away by floods. There is a dramatic race to save the train and the "Air Hostess", the husband's plane flies to the rescue, but the signals of Red Forrister (James Murray) to the pilot of the train and the fair-haired hero (Lyle Talbot) and the fair lady (Evelyn Knapp) in the machine against a pole's short distance ahead of the speeding train save the passengers for the sake of his wife. On the track in front of the train and by the side of the wrecked plane the final scene of reconciliation takes place.

The play is full of thrills, is fast and the audience is carried forward from peak to peak of sensation.

NO EVIDENCE IS PRODUCED

To Support Accusation of Treachery Says Judge

London, March 28—(AP)—The Daily Express prodicts over a parliamentary trying Lieutenant Norman Baillie-Stewart for the sale of military secrets to a foreign agent said Monday that in his charge he will tell the court no evidence has been produced to support an accusation of intentional treachery.

He made this statement as Norman Parkes, defence counsel, was summing up his case.

Baillie-Stewart's explanation, the reading of 80 pounds in the mail from Germany is that the money was sent him by a girl named Marie Louise. The prosecution contended it was payment for the betrayal of military information.

Mr. Parkes, reviewing the testimony said, built up to the moment of his departure for Berlin last summer. "Then," he said, "he expected to be accompanied by a friend.

"So far," he said, "it is clear that there was no treacherous intention in his mind."

I shall tell the court so," the Judge Advocate interposed.

BALLET DANCING POPULAR

Cape Town, South Africa (CP)—There are at least one thousand ballet dancers of school-going age attending the Peninsula's studios. The youngest pupils are three and a half years old. Cape Town has been a dancing centre for a couple of decades, but the art has never been so well established as at present. Parents are realizing more and more the advantages to be derived from dancing. The chief advantage, which makes an irresistible appeal to the parents, is the way it improves their children stronger, in health. A clumsy child learns to overcome his or her awkwardness and becomes lithe and strong; an anti-social child begins to appreciate his

TALKS HIS WAY BACK TO JAIL

North Bay, Ont. March 28—(CP)—Bertram A. Warren, Toronto, pleaded guilty Tuesday to breaking parole and was sentenced to seven months determinate, his unexpired, and six months determinate, by Magistrate S. Wesgar in police court.

According to T. D. Bell, chief of the Ontario Board of Parole, Warren "talked" himself back into jail. Today he completed a seven-day term at the district jail for stealing a ride on the railroad. During his sojourn there he told of breaking parole.

Warren had been released from the Ontario Reformatory where he had been imprisoned for fraud.

OLDEST LINE UNIT

300 YEARS OLD

London, March 28—Ceremonial parades at Midlothian and Aldershot recently commemorating the tercentenary of Britian's oldest infantry regiment the Royal Scots.

As the depot troops paraded at Glencorse Barracks, Penicuik, and the first battalion paraded at Aldershot, the order of the day was called founding of the regiment. Signed by the Princess Royal, Colonel-in-Chief, the order spoke of March 23, 1633, the day when Charles I signed the Royal Warrant authorizing recruitment in Scotland of 1,200 men to form a regiment.

The men were recruited from the Scottish companies which since 1590 had formed the backbone of the household troops of the Kings of France.

ONLY BLUE CLAY UNDER VERANDAH

Thomaston, Ont., March 28 (CP)—Two suspicious sticks, wrapped in papers used for dynamite, and a partly-burned fuse, all found under the house of Mayor Angus Taylor yesterday sent him hurrying to the police.

Provincial Constables Churchill and Smith, Mayor Taylor, Constable of Bruce Mines, investigated and found the "dynamite" was blue clay.

WILL RECALL TIFFIN DAYS

Retired Indian Officers to Bring Back Customs to Own Colony

Retired Indians officers and civil servants have always been something of a race apart, and to many, especially their own little clique in some south coast resort or a spa such as Cheltenham or Bath.

Now, however, on a lovely wooded hill above Maidhya, in Sussex, a colony is to be founded exclusively for them, where they can make their homes and enjoy all the luxuries and the social ritual to which they have been accustomed. Here, for instance, tea will be tiffin, and breakfast will not be served until after the morning caster.

The site is St. Helen's Wood, a horseshoe shaped stretch of a hundred acres, protected from gales by a ridge and commanding some of the loveliest views in Sussex. There has already supplied it with two trout streams and a lake in a fairy setting, and when nearly work on the site is finished there will be a "Golden Bow" for riding, a gymkhana club, a swimming pool, tennis courts, squash racket courts, a "fives court" with very special lawns, and 280 houses, each with a third of an acre of ground.

A gun will be fired at sundown, and, when the work is completed, about eighteen months hence, there will be waterfalls, rhododendron walks, a Dutch garden, and as many other artificial beauties as will add and enhance the loveliness of nature.

WANT RADIO-TELEPHONY FOR FISHING FLEETS

A scheme is nearly complete for equipping small coastal vessels of the fishing fleets trading within 300 miles of the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland with wireless telephony.

The scheme also includes the establishment of a complete chain of low power wireless telephone stations which will enable ships to communicate with the shore or other vessels in British home waters.

Three coastal wireless stations have been equipped as a result of recent experiments. Another eight are nearing completion.

WHY DIFFERENT BIRDS BUILD STRANGE NESTS

Birds build their nests to lay their eggs in and to rear their baby birdlings. One reason for birds' nests being of different kinds is that some baby birds are born with a fine coat of down or wee feathers, so they can run about and take-care of themselves soon after they come out of the shell. They also grow rapidly and soon can be altogether independent of the home nest. So, of course, they do not need to have a substantial home as do some other birdlings.

The nests are also made to keep the precious eggs and the baby birds safe. Birds that live in lonely places where nothing disturbs them sometimes lay their eggs on the ledges of rocks, in the sand or on clumps of grass. But birds living where they may be disturbed need to take care to hide their eggs, so they build their in bushes or trees or in other safe places.

The nests are made as they make also depends upon the shape of their bills, such as the woodpecker, who nests in a tree trunk when they are near their supply of food. Such birds would not be able to weave nests like the robin because their bills would be too clumsy.

HUMBLEST FLY AIDS SCIENCE

Montreal (CP)—Even the humblest type of fly is of great aid to science in the scientist's knowledge of the laws of heredity, according to Dr. Curt Stern, German biologist, who is visiting McGill University here.

Fruit flies, Dr. Stern said, breed from 20 to 40 times a year, thus making it possible to study many generations within a comparatively short space of time. The segregation of certain types of fruit flies, by crossing other types and similar experiments it was made possible to draw conclusions as to the behavior of chromosomes, the bearers of hereditary characteristics in living cells, he declared.

BOYS PAID TO RIDE BIKES

Youngsters Enjoy Exercise Amid Scientific Paraphernalia

MIDDLETOWN, Conn.—Juvenile cyclists of this college town are pedalling somewhat breathlessly for the sake of science—and for 25 cents an hour. Physiologists of Wesleyan University find the thrust of young legs an appealing study in applying the power to the pedals which, they say, can be applied anywhere to bring forward their understanding of the effects of exercise.

After school, the youngsters report in the laboratory. The de-wheeled, stationary bicycle is dustlessly equipped so that they may do their part. They are instructed as the current is stepped up and measured with precision, to determine the muscular energy expended. Mounting the seat, the boy straps on a mouthpiece through which every lungful of air is carried in bags and later analyzed, so far how much oxygen has been used, how much carbon dioxide comes out.

Equipped to the waist, the panting, perspiring young cyclist bravely pedals burning in time to a metronome, taking 80 by the minute. Records in a battery aids the boy in his sizing heart-beat, with a stethoscope. Finally, with the machine's output readings in foot-pounds (one pound per foot would equal one pound of food). The results are analyzed to prove the effect of exercise, the heart and thereby of the pre-adolescent.

The competitive instinct is a big help in the research. Toward the end of 15 minutes' pedalling, with the panting bodily, but when returned and Bills carried the games lead for 15 minutes yesterday, he hammered over the heavily beat and relieves the contestant with grim determination.

The boys are carefully guarded against over-exertion, and have periods of rest between heats. Most of only they amuse themselves looking through microscopes, or grilling the keen of science.

The experiments are conducted by Prof. Edward C. Schneider and C. A. Champion.

RIVAL LOVERS SHOOT IT OUT

Farmer Came Gunnin' For Gambler and Got Him

J. BARLEY, Colo.—Tales of love between a Missouri farmer came to a climax here when the other stole his wife—and got him.

To prevent distortion by imagination when in retelling the story, veteran miners of Fairplay are seeking the original statements of the story, written by F. O. Thornton, who was a witness, and who says he, California. It is guessed as the "incomparable version". Thornton, it is said, wrote it with a modicum of brevity, and here it is in substance:

Ben Steele, the mid-west to the Colorado gold "diggs." Steele's daughter married the simple farm man. Enraged, the maimed practiced shooting the eyes out of squirrels until he thought his aim was good enough and his wrath sufficiently cooled. Then he started for Colorado.

He reached vicinity until he found them at the most roosting of all the unnamed mining camps at the head of Caryall Basin. News of his coming and his quest had preceded him and Ben's fame decided. "You can't shoot a man down in this town. Take that to your mother." You will have to shoot out."

While the unborn went to prepare for the settled down to set up an ace of hearts in the midst of a fox and shed all the red ink from it. The gambler went to the door and died on the spot and the farmer returned home without his erring mate.

YOUTHS ARE TAUGHT TO EARN A LIVING

Training Branches of Life Outside a Business.

NEW YORK—Teaching of subjects in penal institutions of the state which "relates directly to life outside the prison walls" to the inmates, was turned in promote the state commissioner investigating prison administration and construction in a report to the legislature.

The procedure was experimented in the Elmira reformatory, which houses 1,200 youths. Questionnaires determine the subjects in which the inmates are interested, and classes are then formed to meet the needs. Among the things taught are shoemaking on table, barbering, kitchen work and automobile repair.

The project is being expanded to include instruction in machine shop, sheet metal work, carpentry and trade.

With these courses in practical work are linked related subjects in an academic school which employs eight teachers.

"Nothing could be a greater waste of time," said the report, "than to teach these inmates mathematics or economic instruction which they feel has no connection with the problems they will meet on their return to society."

Discovery in Australia in Collection of Zoology

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—The largest and most complete specimen of a prehistoric ever discovered in Australia is included in the collections made by William R. Gilbert, explorer and curator at the Harvard Museum of comparative zoology.

Gilbert was on his 14-months' expedition to Australia and a preliminary investigation of his findings is now in progress.

The discovery of the skeleton of the pleistocene, a fossil marine monster, is believed the most important of Gilbert's finds. The monster, more than forty feet long, is estimated to be more than 100,000 years old. The skeleton is about two thirds complete, making possible for the first time a reconstruction of the animal. Previous finds in Australia have revealed only a fragment of a jaw and small portions of the giant reptile's fingers.

Gilbert's latest discovery is being prepared for mounting, museum officials said, although it will be some months before it is ready for display.

Scientists find was located on the ranch of R. W. H. Thomas near Richmond in Northwestern Queensland, which was a submerged area during the cretaceous period.

BELGIANS TO CELEBRATE THE CREATION OF CONGO

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Commemorating the creation of the Belgian Congo fifty years ago and the opening of the first Belgian railroad from Brussels to Matadi, this city has decided to have an international colonial and industrial exposition in 1935 with Prince Leopold as honorary president.

Twelve nations already have decided to participate in the exhibition which will cover 250 acres of ground. They are Brazil, Chile, China, Egypt, Holland, France, Morocco, Peru, Siam, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.

Development of transportation, electricity and kindred subjects with the colonial section next in importance are the main departments.

OLD WAY TO PULL TOOTH

Method Was Painful But Effect Was Beneficial

SAULT STE. MARIE—Mrs. Mary Dixon, 86, who was born on the South but now resides at Sand River and claims to be the oldest pioneer in Algoma district, has a story to tell of the early dentistry in the district which gives one the creeps and should make all and sundry grateful that a kind providence established a more modern method of extracting teeth than was once practiced here by the Indians.

Mrs. Paton recalls that 75 years ago the patient with a toothache was placed in a tub of water, the offending maker was split with a chisel, and then, to kill the nerve, a small, red-hot iron was applied. In a few hours the pain would cease, she says, and in a few days the tooth would be sufficiently loose to be removed with a pair of pliers or other means.

Whichever, as we know them now, were hard to procure, Mrs. Paton says, but the Indians had a method of catching fish which generally proved successful. Two small hoops were taken from the front foot of a rabbit and fashioned into a sort of cross with string. A small white stone was then tied to a couple of inches above the cross to lure the fish. When a fish accepted the bait it had to be pulled hurriedly from the water, for the least bit of slack-line assured its escape. Fishing lines were made from boiled basswood, which, while warm, was rolled on the knee into small, stringy particles. This would be passed through the dried hip-bone of a carcajou or moose, and as it gradually became smaller it would spike itself into one long cord, quite capable of holding any fish in the lake.

COAST TO COAST

TORONTO — An all - Canadian route for motorists who wish to travel across the Dominion without leaving Canadian territory, has been provided through railway co-operation.

By this new scheme an unbroken route, trip may be made from the coast to coast, by the trail through the very heart of the Canadian Rockies via Banff and the Yoho National Parks.

The transcontinental highway is continuous throughout the year except for a 31-mile link across the Rockies' Selkirk Range and at the junctures the automobile may be shipped from Revelstoke or Golden or vice versa at reasonable rates.

ANY MIGHT WIN KENTUCKY DERBY IN LARGE FIELD

Unusually Large Field Is Expected to Go to Barrier

BRADLEY STABLE

Many Stars of Last Year Will Try For Big Stake

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Seldom in the long history of the Kentucky Derby has the event presented a more open aspect than the forthcoming running on Saturday, May 6. With several of the major three-year-old stakes decreased in value practically every eligible for the $50,000 derby will be retained for that race and it now appears that there will be an unusually large field of well-matched thoroughbreds.

In the first flight are such stars of last year, W. R. Coe's Ladyman, C. V. Whitney's The Derb and Calumet, E. R. Bradley's Bolter-maker and Beatbeak; Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Crowning Glory and Twenty-one; Greentree Stable's Dynastic and Jungle King, Mrs. W. Dunny's Head Play, Lee Rosenberg's Kerry Patch, Adolphe Pon's Projectile and Swivel, Quincy Stable's Rapid J. E. Lowrey's Sandy Hill and P. A. Griffith's Serada.

On last year's form one would have to conclude that the winner will come from among the above mentioned, but those who have witnessed the great improvement some of the two-year-olds have shown in maturing in three-year-old form will concede at least an outside chance to part all of the 118 entries. Certainly their owners and trainers, who must be most familiar with their capabilities must have thought well of their chances to have paid the nominating fee.

Ladyman has become the wicker favorite and unless some mishap befalls the colt in the training bids fair to hold that post until spring racing brings new developments. Ladyman was the largest money-winning two-year-old of 1932 and winner his victories were triumphs in the Hopeful at Saratoga, the Arlington Futurity, the United States Stakes at Saratoga and the Grand Union Hotel Stakes at the same course. In all he amassed a total earning of $111,635.

Ladyman is in the hands of that master trainer, J. H. Stalder, who besides training for W. R. Coe, also looks after the charges of Mrs. C. M. Amory's Sagamore Stable. Mr. Coe won Derby candidates and Mrs. Amory's boy will receive their early preparation over the private course of Mrs. Amory's Maryland Farm. Mr. Stalder has already announced that they will be piloted equally for the Derby.

If E. R. Bradley should be successful in his quest for the golden trophy he will have established a record that well may stand for all time. As it is he has set a mark that will be difficult to equal.

Colonel Bradley's three triumphs in the big race give him a supremacy that is threatened only by the Whitney Stable, which won with Regret in 1915 and Whiskery in 1927 under the ownership of the late Harry Payne Whitney. Mr. Whitney's son, C. V. Whitney, has two of the leading candidates for this year's race in Calumet and The Derb.

A victory for the Whitney Stable, however, would not equal the accomplishments of Colonel Bradley for on two occasions the Kentuckian not only provided the winner, but also the second horse. This feat was first achieved by Commander J. K. L. Ross in 1919 when his Sir Barton and Billy Kelly ran one, two. In 1921 Colonel Bradley duplicated the performance with Behave Yourself and Black Servant. Then in 1926 he repeated with Bubbling Over and Bagenbaggage. Last year Colonel Bradley's Burgoo King, son of Bubbling Over, annexed the big prize. Colonel Bradley, also ran second to Morvich in 1922 with Bet Mosie.

MUCH PRAISE GIVEN PLAY "ALIEN CORN"

Stirring, Magnificent and Absorbing Story.

NEW YORK—Katharine Cornell's public may have spoken apathetic about her recent production of the classical drama, "Lucrece" but the newest play offers this star in a role that should measure up to the popularity of her performances in the Barretts of Wimpole Street" and "The Green Goddess."

She impersonates Miss Brandt, a Vienese pianist concert artist who was once described as the "nicest musical desert" of a small town American college. The play is "Alien Corn", and it has Sidney Howard writing again on the high note performance of his "The Silver Cord". Here he has gotten away with the style of his unfortunate "The Green Goddess" which he brought out a couple of seasons ago with an odor of Hollywood movie studios about it.

"Alien Corn" is as stirring, significant and animated as anything he has ever written. And with Miss Cornell to help him Brandt alive with a performance that is beautiful, thrilling and tender—well, it becomes one of the most exciting evenings in this fast-fading season.

Feminism strikes the door to a constructive, liberal, good-factor solution of our problems whether they be economic, social or political. —Nicholas Murray Butler.

FISH PROVIDES GREAT VARIETY

Enumerates Various Tasty Dishes From Canadian Fish

(Written for The Canadian Press by Mrs. Evelene Spencer)

OTTAWA—How many housewives have ever stopped to think how great a variety of fish foods there is available in Canada?

Beef, poultry, mutton and pork, with veal and lamb, make up the list of available changes in the case of meat. But there are so many different kinds of Canadian fish.

From the Atlantic, for instance, Canadians get cod, haddock, hake, halibut, mackerel, salmon, alewives, herring, sardines, and sweet-fish, and other fish, as well as such shellfish as lobsters, clams, oysters and scallops. From the Pacific come salmon, halibut, herring, pilchards, black cod, oysters, shrimps, crabs and so on, while from the fresh waters fisheries we get trout, whitefish, pickerel, bullheads, goldeyes, etc.

As a matter of fact, more than 60 different varieties of food fish and shellfish are taken from Canada's commercial fisheries, and all of them of prime quality.

Probably a good many Canadian housewives do not realize what a variety of fish is available to them from Canadian sources, and perhaps they do not realize how many different ways there are of cooking these healthful food-stuffs. They are apt to use only two or three kinds of fish and follow the same methods of cooking again and again. Then, perhaps they think they have run the whole gamut of fish as a food.

But fish may be cooked in many ways. They may be broiled, panbroiled, sauted, fried in deep fat, baked, boiled, steamed, stewed, scalloped, braised, pot-roasted, cooked in a casserole, or cooked by the spencer method in a very hot oven with a minimum of time and labor. Or they may be made into broth or bisque or soup or chowder, salad, or souffle, or creamed or scalloped.

Fish foods may be cooked in these dishes suitable for every meal. What could be more tasty for breakfast, for example, than a kippered herring or some finnan haddie or a fine salt mackerel. Or, for dinner, a piece of halibut or salmon or cod or whitefish or haddock? Or, for supper, an oyster stew or a scalloped dish? Or what more delicious than a fish chowder or salad or a clam stew? Describes School Life in South African Village

Pen Friend in Canada Hears of Customs in Africa

Tweed—The following interesting letter was received a short time ago by Reid Cooper, a pupil of Tweed High School, from Kitty Erasmus of Mount Ayliff, South Africa:

Mount Ayliff,
East Griqualand,
Cape Province,
South Africa,
February 18, 1933

Dear Reid:

You can just imagine how surprised I was to receive a letter from you, as it was a very unexpected letter, but most welcome to me.

I see you people are having quite there now while we are sitting here in sunny South Africa. I think I will never be able to stand the cold you have in Canada because we seldom have snow and ice here in Mt. Ayliff. When it snows the snow just falls to the height of about an inch here in the village and soon the rain comes and every bit melts away. In the winter time it stays for quite a number of days, as it is light and I think the reason why it doesn't snow so very much in the village is because it is so very low, and if we want to go out skating we have to go right to the tops of the mountains.

Last year I passed by Standard Six and am at present out of school as we can't go any further in these small villages. We have to go to bigger places if we want to learn further than the Standard Six and then you can go to Std. Set.

We are raising a big family. In our family are Father and Mother, and all of us children are still at home, not one being married. We are all still in the best of health and all living happily together. We are five girls and five boys. We are in a family of nine children altogether, of which I am enclosing a snapshot.

Now, Reid, it's raining so hard I will have to close now, but I should love to be with you skating on the ice, but I suppose you people will have great sports in Canada. In winter time we go to school at 7 o'clock a.m. It is a fairly cold, but in summer we have to go in at seven a.m. as it is so terribly hot. when it gets to nine o'clock.

Excuse my poor spelling, but very hot days there.

My two sisters, Angie and Minna, are twenty-one and eighteen years old, respectively, would also like pen pals. Oh, Canada, either boys or girls.

What pastimes have you in Canada? Are there any dark races? You must send me a few snapshots of all the dark races if you have any, and I will also send you some of the natives here in Africa and are rather savage-looking. They work for the white people, the girls working in the kitchens and the boys outside looking after the cattle or working in the gardens.

I suppose you are English speaking, as we are. We speak Afrikaans-speaking.

Do you people have dances there? At Christmas time we have nearly all our dances when we are always in the village hall. Girls from about fourteen years go to dances here given by the grown-ups.

We only have one church here, which is called the Church of Scotland, but I don't really belong to that, although I sometimes go or hear.

also. I think I'd forget what I church is like. The church to which I belong is the Dutch Reformed. But I don't really mind to which I go as my impression is all churches are the same; like the Presbyterian and Wesleyan churches. It is on account of the few people in the village that we haven't all these churches, and if a minister comes here to give us a sermon we have to go to the village hall and I don't like that very well. But really it is awkward to have church once in about two months.

About 40 miles of Mount Ayliff is a copper mine which has not been worked for very long time. Once when they just started work-ing it is said that men were scheduled to death. The people to whom the mine belongs often come to make an effort to work it but without success, so I suppose they'll always have it for the time being.

You asked me which is the nearest city to Mt. Ayliff. Well, we haven't really got a city very near, for the nearest is Durban which is two hundred and fifty miles away. Indeed, the natives have to go to and there we have to go if we want to take anybody to the hospital or if we want to go to a bank, as we haven't anything of that sort here. Kokstad has a population of about two hundred people, so you see it is a large city. Well, my small village is by.

Here we play games like tennis, football, cricket and golf. Golf is not played at present as it is not the season for it. I've heard they are having a good chance to clean up soon.

We have really had a lovely rain to-day as it has not been raining for quite a long time. Now you can just see the natives beginning to come out of their round, plastic mansions, which is their chief crop, which they call the European.

I just want to thank you for the lovely magazine sent of yours, and your little sister. I really loved to see one of my Canadian schools.

Tell your little sister if she likes she can write to my sister who is seven years, as she also has a pen friend in India. (My little sister's name is Minnie).

Now you must really answer my letter as soon as you receive it, because you know the writer is looking forward to a reply.

Your South African Cousin,
KITTY ERASMUS.

P.S.—I am giving you a sentence of my own language and you must let me know if you have made out what it means: "Dear kom soon storm a en an sa nie sie mooi maak nie sal ons nooit die brug haal nie."
Liefde,
K. E.

GIVES MONEY FOR ANIMALS

Birds and Blind Folk Also Receive Gifts From Author

Stockholm, Sweden (CP)—"I have lived too long not to find it easier to love animals than to love men," writes Dr. Axel Munthe, famous author of the "Books of San Michele" and of the greatest literary world successes of later years. Dr. Munthe, who lived the life of a recluse on the island of Capri, with a quaint and yarn-bearted letter to the people of Sweden, King Gustaf V, donates a Christmas gift of 100,000 kronor to the Society for the Support of the proceeds of his book, to be distributed by the King to those in need, for the benefit of the blind, the lapps and the birds.

The late Queen Victoria, whom Dr. Munthe attended, promised to distribute the proceeds of his book and now requests the King so do it instead. Dr. Munthe himself is now almost blind and therefore feels warranty for his unfortunate fellow-sufferers, who will benefit in several ways from his gift. "As regards my little friends, the birds," the doctor writes, "I think we do best to leave these homeless children of the wilds in peace with their relation-ship without necessary interference, but protected by the right of weak."—The donor wishes his gift to be spent for the care of blind lapps, who can no longer continue their poverty-some mode life.

The birds, however, are the proteges nearest to the author's heart and a large part of the proceeds of his books has previously been spent for bird protection. He writes in his letter to the King: "No newspaper prize could give me more joy than the certainty that the 'Book of San Michele' has helped a few of my grateful birds unscathed on their way southwards. Were it in my power to feed all the fighting birds that courageously remain on a hunger strike on bare-rocked land and water, I would not even shrink from writing another book in spite of my loathing for silence."

The gift will probably be used for establishing new sanctuaries for wild birds, such as the author has already created in Capri and in the Swedish island of Oeland, the former summer home of the late Queen Victoria.

Dr. Munthe realizing he is now old and feeling gratefully entrusts his gift in the wise hands of the King "in spite of the long list of sins in the game-bag." He finally says that in the forecast of the literary weather prophets in 16 centuries comes true the "Book of San Michele" will survive its author. The sun now given will perhaps grow with the years "and I will then let you hear from me again, living or dead," the strange hermit concludes his letter.

NO NEED IN HOTELS TO STATE ONE'S AGE

London (CP)—The Travel Association of Great Britain has been asked a question which appears to be of some concern to women visiting Great Britain. It is: "Must I state my age in the hotel register?" Visitors from other lands, if over 16 years of age, are required to register their name and address, date of arrival, address from which they last came, date of departure, and destination. But—and this answers the question—there is nothing in the regulations affecting foreign visitors which requires them to state their age. In this respect, therefore, they may travel in Great Britain, and take their ease in any British hotels without anxiety. The secret, if it be one, is their own.

About 500 people are killed or injured each year in the United States and about 1,200 are injured.

CHURCH ONLY HOLLOW SHELL

St. James Catholic Church Completely Destroyed by Fire

Montreal, March 26 (CP)—A hollow shell, four roofless walls topped by a steeple, mark all that was left of St. James Roman Catholic Church, from which, crowded 1,000 people in a state of worship Sunday when fire almost completely destroyed the building.

The fire, authorities are inclined to believe, was deliberately set and two persons, a man and his wife, were being held in custody, while police thoroughly investigated their connection with the outbreak.

Provincial police, however, said Monday evening officials that an attempt to destroy the edifice was to be made, and named her husband as a suspect. They were picking up Sunday night in rooming house. Police learned they had quarreled violently last night.

Originating in walls or ceiling of the second gallery where worshippers are securing a firm hold before it reached floor, the fire was first seen as a wall of flame. A wave of terror swept the crowded congregation as they about to leave at the conclusion of the 10 a.m. mass. Priests, attendants and brave spirits among the attendants quelled the panic and ushered the congregation out.

NEWFOUNDLAND TO PROTECT HER FUR BEARING ANIMALS

St. John's, Nfld., —(CP)— Newfoundland, poor or prosperous, according to the fish catch, is looking to diversified industry as an avenue of escape from poverty. Increased attention has been paid agriculture, dairying and fur farming by the efforts of the Land Development Association and at present Newfoundland is considering the prospects for a great fur industry.

It is understood that legislation will be introduced at the March session of the assembly to protect fur bearing animals and establish some control.

Commenting on the possibilities of the fur industry, the St. John's Daily News opines that if proper protection is enforced "an export trade of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 annually could be secured within two decades."

The News considers it strange that an island of apparently only 42,000 square miles, the annual export of the value of which in 1931 was $17,000,000, and the industry was almost at a standstill during the season of 1931-32.

Half of the world's fine cuniculus wool comes from Australian sheep.

RETAGGED GOOSE TAGGED IN 1923

Kingsville, Ont., (March 28 (CP)—Jack Miner and made a "scientific catch" of 364 Canada Geese at this point, secretary Jack Miner announced today. The birds were banded with a leg band bearing Miner's name and address and, on the opposite side of the band is the number of the goose and the year of banding. In making the catch, Miner's prospectors ran down, captured, banded and another legged in 1923, proving that the birds return year after year.

The opening game saw the Picton ALTON boys go down to defeat and outplay by-team by about three goals to two scores, the final being 4 to 1. The goals of the winning team were scored by Davis Tonnge, the Picton defence player, while Picton's only counter in the game was scored by Ellis pass. G. A second game for the local entry in the league, Grills' Garage, was played last night resulting in the score of 3 to 1. The locals were the victors in the close game of play and were never headed in the scoring race, being led by the Trentonians from the side of the Cedar Street boys, who, with the aid of their goal tender, and after crediting the locals with a goal in the first period with a lead low drive into the lower corner of the net, Ginger Wilson for the winners Conners and Morgan on the defence again proved the burden of the Trenton attack with the Canning twins, Ken and Merrill, performing well on the forward line with Cy Bernard, Trenton's star defence player in front of the alternates, Anderson and Cooper, who also looked the best for the locals.

CURRENT SPORT

Knocks and Boosts

Yesterday we ran into Jack Bell, president of the Peterboro senior baseball club, who was a visitor in the city over the week end. Jack is one sports of the local baseball chatter and seemed quite optimistic over the prospects of a senior ball in the district in 1933. "Of course we have to go after it in a strong way if we were years ago but it is going to be possible to get the senior league we wanted," stated Jack when we met him and he went on to tell us of the project on foot in the Limestone City. Bell has a very pleasing manner and many up and coming leagues as possible.

After hearing Mr. Bell relate the possibilities of baseball in Peterboro we are to tell a little more regarding Cobourg's baseball prospects and around this latest baseball sentiment. We are beginning to step up and give senior baseball a try out in this district we understand, that there is a high class short stop residing within a few miles of Cobourg and this player has had considerable experience in the senior field having played with the Ottawa Valley League, we think.

The Spirit of Referee George Matthews from the N.H.L. staff of officials may have its reaction on the local sporting scene, for it was recently Matthews was suspended from the league for a period of time due to he had shown favouritism towards the Montreal Maroons in a recent game, Matthews, in turn, has threatened to quit the staff of officials of the league governors. The suspension of Matthews brings forcibly to the fore the old controversy which was Bobby Rowlands, who was suspended for the rest of the season for good reason at all. Perhaps it is time that some sort of action be carried will terminate the present intolerable wrangling.

What is really needed by the N. H. L. is a staff of officials similar to the old days when referees had the say and two-fisted officials. The game was a lot more interesting and the same atmosphere pie did the American League baseball game a few years ago when "Bat" Johnson, then father and president of the loop, would eight thousand and suspended umpires and turned them loose in the league. Over a period, games and even official knows that an official is always reported and he will stand for no back talk, then that official began to be handled with leather, will progress. What is needed in the N.H.L. today is a staff of officials who will be feared, while performing their duties. Once such a staff of officials are procured and they receive to the full backing of the league heads, the support of their president and managers, there will be more peaceful proceedings as have been so prevalent in the N.H.L. lately. We are especially glad to see Boston. Mc-Laughlin can fully testify his contempt for the fine treatment given the support of his president.

After some years lying dormant the Belleville Tennis Club will once more will resume at the Belleville Arena tonight, when all local Oldies and the town heads-up against George Lakeside's Trenton "Imperials". On the Trenton team will be the Belleville and District League three-ten teams in the above week end and next with Elwood Dudley's charges seeing set the Trenton team by one single point for first position.

"Ken" MacPherson informs us that when two teams met recently in Madoc to decide the Peterboro senior it time he had failed to judge the turns behind Chamberlain the two ends. Every game he officiated at Cobourg has been in the nets and the "wonder" goalie has never opposed him. MacDonald has barred at least one occasion but did not accomplish the feat when they met and is "burning up" at the next meeting goal. "I'll bet that bet, second-on tonight or know the reason why," stated Red of the Cobourg skating his men of red hair.

We do not expect any large scoring for the Belleville Intermediate hockey club and as both clubs check well until half and a half battling defence, Bill Green will have the situation as referee.

Only a handful of fans saw the Belleville Intermediate hockey club's brother at the arena when the Picton "All-Stars" were defeated by 9 to 7 downing the Tweed seniors by the same score. Keith Ellis headed the Belleville attack with five goals, Gerry Gaines scoring four and Ted Lowry one Trenton. The eight goal attack proved the undoing of the visitors, when the Frankford "Shiners" who were the runners used considerably bold the Madoc boys at all to.

President Patrick announced after the games, that Madoc, Tweed, Picton and Frankford would meet on Wednesday night to decide who should make winners of second and third positions in the league and when these are decided they will battle it out on Friday night for supremacy in the local, entry, Grills' Garage, in the final game.

Did you know that—Doc will be the speed in Bessie the river? the Griffith stadium Washington, D.C. Because of an old baseball ordinance the sale of beer is banned from any ball park within a mile of the Soldiers' home. And parts of the Griffith stadium are that limit of the property of the parts of the Soldiers' home in Petworth.

NOISY GOUNNA FOWL CAN HOUSE A FARM

Guinea fowls have been under domestication for thousands of years, but have never lost their distrust of mankind.

Their native home is in a native of West Africa, and the form in which it exists today is almost identical with the original form of thousands of years ago. Because of its suspicious nature and its loud, piercing voice, the guinea fowl is kept on many farms for the purpose mainly than to serve as a watchdog. When cautioned by slight it fills the air with a series of shrill, piercing notes that will arouse a whole neighborhood of sound sleepers.

PERCH ROOSTER HIGH TO STILL MORNING CROW

Colorado Springs, Colo.—An expert at raising chickens declared during these early morning hours, is the qualification of R. W. Taylor, who has been called upon several times to still the voices of the barnyard alarm clocks and thereby enforce the anti-noise ordinance.

The system Taylor uses is to have the loud mouthed rooster placed on a perch near the top of the chicken house so he cannot straighten up. A rooster needs plenty of room in which to do his crowing," Taylor said.

BRANDON JRS. SURPRISE THE REGINA PATS

Game Ends in a Scoreless Tie

Toronto, March 28 (CP)—Observers has remarkable hops of a Canadian hockey crown rested today on the sturdy shoulders of Joe Primeau, Shamrock centre ice star, and their stanch at the Central league with Brandon, Manitoba, Junior hockey association titlists, Shamrocks have to overcome the goal lead established by Bill Hancock's Thistledown puckstars in the first of the two-game series for the championship.

Scotter rink observers were rudely awakened last night when Brandon, last night when the O.H.A. senior champions, Regina Pats, snapped through a disconcerted defense to 2-1 victory and took the two-game total to 3-2. Thistledown Pats hooked Allen cop semi-finalists on the defensive with end rails Morrison Thistledown billets, stand between the Shamrock nets when Coach Charlie Query met at Toronto Wednesday and Friday.

BASKETBALL

Playing a Rome League Basketball fixture which was postponed on account of the Queen Alexandra being held at Albert College the Air Force quints took the measure of the latter at the gym last night to the tune of 36-26. The Flyers deserved their win as they played superior ball for the most part and showed considerable form around the basket during the game. At the end of the second period the score of which raised during this period of play they had would have been much greater, the final half saw Rendes of the Flyers on the sidelines due to error no less than seven-fold goals. There was shortly no doubt but that the Flyers would overcome the elevated shortcomings of the first half and they did so with ease, the Flyers finishing with five wins and the less Albert Aces bowing to a defeat. Next game Tuesday and can regain the leadership or if they win their remaining fixtures, a short game on Thursday; Starting at 8 o'clock.

Pre-Game Comment as N. H. L. Teams Take Ice

Toronto, March 28 (CP)—Optimism prevailed in rival camps of the National Hockey League's six Stanley Cup contenders today as four of them ventured to ice, with announcings that will see two of them eliminated tonight while Boston and Toronto renew their battle for the league championship and right to defend the cup finals.

Undampled by the three goal handicap they face, Canadiens take on the redoubtable Rangers at Montreal and "are going to be out there to fight to finish," said Manager Leo Dandurand on his return to Montreal after his team's 2-0 defeat in the first game Sunday at New York. "One goal early in the game will set us off on the right track," he added, "and I think the boys will do it."

"You can never tell what will happen in a hockey game," said Conny Lester, Patrick leader of the Rangers, "but I admit that three goals is a nice advantage to hold but it may mean nothing in the end." Tonight's games will eliminate one of the clubs.

Wartimes, tempered the optimism of the Maroons as they prepared to go to Detroit in an effort to overcome Red Wings' lead of two goals earned in the first game at Montreal Saturday night. The Maroons admit the hardness of the task but "the boys feel they are far from beaten yet," said Manager Eddie Gerard.

Smiling Jack Adams had no curb his disheveled charges at practice yesterday as players fostered around the ice with abandon. A capacity crowd is assured for tonight's game to cheer them on after their first victory in Stanley Cup playoffs and their first on Montreal ice this season.

Dick Irvin is not saying much about his Maple Leafs' chances in the second of the three-of-five series in Boston but is confident his team can win if his sharpshooters quit "filling the posts." Conny Smythe, manager of the Leafs told newspapermen yesterday: "tell your readers that Tuesday night will be the last appearance of the Bruins in action this season."

Boston's powerful squad are in fine condition for the second game tonight, reportedly figured Aurel Bailey and Red Horner turned out for practice yesterday and may get into the game provided Dick Irvin thinks emergency demands it. Coach Art Ross of the Bruins team will move to Toronto for the remainder of the series.

DOCTOR EXPLAINS METHOD

GROWING OLD GRACEFULLY

Dallas—How to grow old gracefully was explained to doctors in the medical section of the Pan-American Medical Association's fourth congress here, by Dr. L. P. Barker of Baltimore.

He was introduced as "the philosopher of the profession," well past middle life, gray-haired, he told before the young men and told them how to become old "without becoming a prey to every disease."

At middle age, sooner if possible, he urged that examinations be made at least twice a year, to prevent should start a progressive cutting down of routine duties, he said, to accustomed hobbies, like exercise, light reading and careful diet.

Dr. Barker advised strongly against marriages of the "May and December" type.

"Many an old man has died before his time from trying to keep pace with a young wife," he said.

WHITE WEASEL VISITS HOME

Stinel River, Ont. (CP)—Bob Beck is a model wolf trapper in this district and season after season has told of his exploits with the forest animal. But most George McArthur, genial caretaker in the Stinel Rivers Consolidated Mining Company, has something new in the art of trapping.

George was coming up the cellar steps of his home, when he heard a commotion in his refrigerator. The refrigerator occupied the space between the inside and storm doors of his kitchen and the outer door had been left ajar.

On investigation George found he had captured a full-sized white weasel.

Although the cost of pelts of this variety is decreased considerably, George hopes a few more will make his back door their stamping grounds.

HEN LAYS TWO EGGS WEIGH 1-4 POUND EACH

Preston, Ont.—When bigger eggs are laid, Biddy, a White Leghorn hen, will lay them.

Her owner, Manuel H. Riggs, believes his hen has established some kind of record by laying two eggs which weighed one-quarter pound each. The record-breaking performance was accomplished by three days.

The first egg measured 2 1-2 inches by 2 3-4 inches. The second was 2 1-4 by 2 1-4 inches.

ENGLISH FORD FACTORY CLOSES

7,000 Out on Strike But Few Return to Work

Dagenham, England, March 28—Work has ceased at the Ford factory here as the consequence of a strike of 2,000 employees over the question of wages. Monday morning the management promised to consider wages and short-dated workers went back to work.

The dispute started among members of the Amalgamated Engineering Union in the tool room and effected 2,000 workers Monday morning but day gangs came to work, were so effective that the works are at present at a standstill, with 7,000 employees idle.

The Ford plant here is reputed to be the largest motor car factory in Europe.

The majority of the night shift went on strike Sunday night when pickets were placed. When the strike had been decided upon as a protest against wage reductions said to have been instituted during the past week.

The reductions were said to range from three to 10 pence an hour. (About 4½ to 20c cents).

M. J. Tanner, organizing delegate to the Amalgamated Engineering Union, said: "We had been a member of ours and on Saturday the men in the tool room thought they would call a meeting." It was held yesterday and the picketing plan was decided upon.

The picketing appeared thoroughly organized and there was no disorder. As a precaution, however, a number of mounted police were sent to the scene. They found many hundreds of workmen massed in the private road approaching the works and experienced difficulty in pressing a way through the crowds.

Commissioner Milfred, Blanche Duff of the Salvation Army, of North London, who is stated to have inspired Bernard Shaw's play, "Major Barbara" left 11,385 pounds.

KIDNAPPERS ARE HUNTED

Band Rid of 15 Year Old Boy in Full Flight

Warren, O., March 28—(AP)—A desperate band of kidnappers, rid of their 15-year-old captive, was hunted by federal authorities frankly skeptical of the father's story of a rendezvous with the abductors on a lonely road shrouded in darkness.

The boy, Peter Meyers, Jr., appeared in good health as he related his experiences during the eight days he was held in a cabin in a room following his capture by three men armed with revolvers and a sub-machine gun.

"If you listen to me, you'll be all right," he quoted his captors as saying. "If you try to get away, you'll kill you."

Otherwise, he said, he was well treated by the men who showed themselves only when their faces were hidden behind masks. He believed six or seven were in the gang.

First Counter-Revolt is Discovered in Brunswick

ARREST SENSATION

Erstwhile Comrades of Nazis Under Guard

Brunswick, Germany, March 28 (AP)—The first counter-revolt plot within the ranks of supporters of the two months-old Hitler government was reported uncovered, today with 1,350 men under arrest.

A dissension has set in the steel helmet war veterans, allies of the Nazi brown-shirted storm troops which made the creation of the Hitler coalition cabinet, was declared.

Diedrich Klaagges, Nazi minister of the Interior in Brunswick declared members of the disbanded Stahlhelm, the Republican defense organization, banded with others to overthrow the orders to start a fight against the Nazi party.

Those arrested included 300 steel helmeters, who had been made auxiliary police along with the Nazi storm troops. A machine gun and numerous rifles were also seized.

Adolf Hitler, leader of Labor in Chancellor Hitler's cabinet which heretofore has been considered a coward peace of perfect harmony. Theodor Duesterberg, Labor minister in the cabinet far outnumber the Nazis and Nationalist parties are closely affiliated with the steel helmet organization.

The steel helmeters and Leftists were arrested in a sensational raid last night at the headquarters here, in the Municipal Sick Benefit Association building.

A detachment of storm troops guarded the entrance while inside the main hall the 300 steel helmeters severely paced the floor under watch of their armed guards.

The war veterans were disarmed and the Nazi storm troopers threatening them carried carbines.

Upstairs, on the second, third and sixth floors, the 1,050 other prisoners awaited questioning. They were carried many of them possessed weapons.

Among those arrested in the building were Assistant State Leader Bruhn and Leader Lange of the Reichsbanner Leader Hagemeister, who was negotiating with the steel helmets when his followers and the steel helmeters were so angered by the action against them that some of them assaulted their wardens before giving them up.

Halifax, March 28 (CP) Decreases in January 26 per cent. in sales of liquor through the Nova Scotia Liquor Commission during the first fiscal year is shown in the commission's annual report.

Brooklyn Mothers Mystified by Another Child Murder

SUSPECT SEEN

Efforts of Police to Revive Child Without Effect

New York, Mar. 28 (AP)—Sudden and violent death which has been the mystery of the Brooklyn police and Brooklyn callers struck down little Barbara Wiles today as she went to the dark cellar of her home to do the bidding of her mother.

Barbara, who was six years old, was asked by her mother to go to the cellar and get an empty apartment house to bring up the baby carriage of her brother.

Fifteen minutes after the little girl had not returned. Mrs. Hanna Wiles, the mother, went to see what caused the delay. At the foot of the stairs the baby carriage lay overturned on what at first looked to the mother in the dark like a fitted body. Only when she had gone gray accustomed to the dimness, she saw that it was the body of her daughter, she screamed and ran downstairs, finding the little girl unconscious with a hempen cord twisted about her neck.

Police emergency squads were rushed to the scene and doctors called to the aid of the girl with respirators, but all efforts were in vain.

One neighbor woman questioned in the early investigation told of seeing an unknown man of about 30 dash into the vestibule of her tenement house, with a bundle under his arm. "What," asked the police, "was the bundle like?"

"A hearse," said Policeman Flanagan, "it was taken from the room feet first to avoid frightening the deceased. We found it later, abandoned in Morton Grove."

LIEUTENANT IS NOT GUILTY

Courtmartial Finds Young Officer Not Guilty on 3 Counts

London, March 28—(AP)— The courtmartial trying Lieutenant Norman Bethune-Sievert on a charge of selling military information to a foreign agent retired this afternoon to consider its verdict after the Police Advocate had summed-up the evidence.

It may be several days, perhaps a week before the verdict is published but in his summation the Judge Advocate declared that the court must quit the accused on three of the 70 counts against him.

Those counts, the court, that Lt. Baillie-Stewart "communicated to Otto Wiedemann, Chief of Section 3 of information which might be useful to an enemy," the Judge Advocate said;

"I think it should not be far wrong if I said that your findings on the charges probably would be guilty on 67 counts."

Lt. Baillie-Stewart's explanation of the result of his trip last month to Germany is that it was sent by a "well meaning friend" and that Thurs section condemned that it was payment for the betrayal of military information.

All day long, troubles and joys, but mostly troubles—are poured into her ear by breadliners and former bank presidents, wives of Congressmen and society leaders of suddenly reduced income.

Belleville Merchants' Carnival

A notable event in the history of Belleville is scheduled for Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week when the Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville will entertain a host of friends and patrons from far and near with a feast of money-saving values in all lines of merchandise. This is the second annual event of the kind, intended to widen the area which now regards Belleville as the natural shopping centre and demonstrate to a larger clientele that Belleville is the natural and best shopping centre for all the territory served by the splendid roads which lead into the city. Last year "Three Happy Days" which inaugurated the annual carnival of bargains, was an outstanding success and advertised Belleville far and wide as progressive and up-to-the-minute. This year greater efforts have been made to provide a program which will please everybody and make this Carnival of Bargains long to be remembered.

It is no longer a secret that prices, having reached rock bottom in many lines, are now on the up grade and it is the part of wisdom and thrift to take time by the forelock and stock up on necessities before prices climb.

For this Carnival of Bargains Belleville merchants have arranged decided money-saving values in every line—sane, profit-plus values, you can depend on.

Elsewhere in this paper will be found the program of special events which will feature this Merchants' Carnival, also the interesting advertisements of the various merchants participating, listing samples of the many bargains to be offered during the three days. A list of the merchants participating will also be found on another page.

No effort has been spared to make this the greatest merchandising event in the history of Belleville and one which will give pleasure and profit to thousands of people. Belleville Bigger Bargain Days, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 30, 31, and April 1, 1933.

SACRIFICE OF MASS DEFINED

Rev. Father Augustine Lives Address Up-on Mass

An eloquent sermon on the Sacrifice of the Mass was delivered at St. Michael's Church last evening by Rev. Father Augustine, of Thurs Union City, N.J., on the second evening of the Lenten series.

Sacrifice was the highest form of external religion, said Father. The highest form of internal religion, said Father Augustine. The sacrifice of the Mass offered on Calvary allays throughout the world daily from sunrise to sunset is the self-same sacrifice, with the same victim as that of the Cross, on Calvary on the Cross. In devotion to the mass, Father Augustine said, is the highest form of worship of God.

The preacher urged his hearers to attend Sunday Mass faithfully, thus giving to God the honour that is His due. He urged the people to be made to be present at Mass and to listen with a true spirit of prayer pleasing to God.

Solemnization of the Blessed Sacrament was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. Fr. J. P. Nicholson, D.D., as the concluding part of the Mission services. Preceding the sermon of Father Augustine, Father Nicholson gave instruction on preparation for the Sacrament of Penance and Communion. Instructions on the Commandments are given each day, after 5.30 and eight o'clock Masses, and Mission services at night begin at seven-thirty.

Another asks if the Hydro Commission at the request of the O.P.S. bonds to exchange such bonds for bonds of the Hydro Electric Commission guaranteed by the province.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., March 28 (CP)—One of the most stubborn blazes in the history of Sault Ste. Marie fire department in years today completely gutted the Woolworth and Capp's restaurant. The Top Tailors and Mackenzie Shoes were also damaged considerably.

Flames had originated in the basement of the restaurant, the fire department said, and had spread when discovered by police constable Linklater, with H. H. Only when she had gone gray accustomed to the dimness, she saw that it was the body of her daughter, she screamed and ran downstairs, finding the little girl unconscious with a hempen cord twisted about her neck.

Police emergency squads were rushed to the scene and doctors called to the aid of the girl with respirators, but all efforts were in vain.

One neighbor woman questioned in the early investigation told of seeing an unknown man of about 30 dash into the vestibule of her tenement house, with a bundle under his arm. "What," asked the police, "was the bundle like?"

"A hearse," said Policeman Flanagan, "it was taken from the room feet first to avoid frightening the deceased. We found it later, abandoned in Morton Grove."

PSYCHIC FORCES CAN MOVE TABLES DOCTORS ASSERT

Proves Contention of Several Scientists in Work

EXPERIMENTAL

Seams to Reveal Extraordinary Telepiasm Photos

WINNIPEG — Interesting experiments in the realm of psychic research and their extraordinary results are reviewed by Dr. T. Glen Hamilton, well-known physician, in a series of articles in the Winnipeg Free Press.

Dr. Hamilton, whose investigations into psychic phenomenon began some fifteen years ago in this city has become an international figure and his work in the field of physical science has attracted the attention of scientists in many countries.

The Winnipeg physician in his articles deals mainly with telekinesis, more commonly known as "table-turning" or "table-lifting," telepiasm, the strange while masses which emanate from mediums in certain trances, and remarkable results obtained in telepiasmic photography. Dr. Hamilton as a result of his varied experiments believes the world is at the threshold of a wonderful new sphere of knowledge which physical science will still further open up.

The experiments in telekinesis were made with a little floatilth, woman, referred to by Dr. Hamilton as "Elisabeth M.", as medium while those in telepiasm were made with the aid of a medium known as "Mary M.". In many of his explorations in the psychic field the experimenter was assisted by other scientific investigators and at all times elaborate precautions were taken to prevent fraudulent action by either the medium or those associated with him in the various seances.

Telepiasmic Photography.

Probably the outstanding result of Dr. Hamilton's experimentation was obtained in telepiasmic photography. Appearing in a mass of telepiasmic photographs on October 27, 1929, were two faces bearing striking resemblance to Raymond, the young son of Sir Oliver Lodge, who died during the Great War. Compared with photographs of the son of the famous scientist, published in the book "Raymond, or Life and Death" it was seen, however, the miniatures revealed by the telepiasm were not identical.

"The eyes were looking in a different direction," states Dr. Hamilton. "The lighting effects were entirely different and most curious of all, the supernatural face appeared to be that of an older and more mature Raymond than the young Raymond who gave his life for his country."

Writing to Dr. Hamilton after receiving the telepiasmic photography, Sir Oliver Lodge said: "The Raymond likeness you now send is quite a remarkably good one and seems in accordance with the control's testimony. It is not, as you say, the same photograph, but represents a face very like it." (The control referred to was one of the "trance directors" who speaking through the medium, informed the investigators the face was that of Raymond).

Describing investigations through the mediumship of "Mary M." which began early in 1926 the Winnipeg doctor referred to the mounting of a new trance personality who became known as the Young Man or "Y.M." and who made the claim that with the co-operation of the investigators he was about to set out to prove the continuity of existence.

At his instigation Dr. Hamilton constructed a ball equipment that was attached to the wall well out of reach of the medium. Relating the remarkable happenings at these seances the physician in one of his articles states the "Y. M." asked him to request the ball to ring. The ball would ring the number of times requested. "In brief," states Dr. Hamilton, "it appeared to be under the influence of an unseen human being. 'Y. M.' of course claimed to be this being. He insisted that his will, not the medium's, was supreme."

Again at the instance of the trance personality, a photograph was taken at the moment the bell was ringing. When a similar experiment was undertaken some time later under the direction of the same trance personality the results were of a startling nature.

Cameras Register.

"We found to our amazement," writes Dr. Hamilton, "that the cameras had registered, first, the presence of a large bridal dress of pure white telepiasm from the medium's left hostrip; and second, the presence of two exceedingly fine cords, presumably also telepiasmic, extending from Mary M.'s head to the ringing bell-box above."

Explaining the significance of the discoveries Dr. Hamilton states "The discovery that the telepiasmic cords were present at the very moment the bell was ringing brings to light new proof that this quasi-material substance has something to do with causing movements of objects without contact; that it is in all probability a conveyor of energy from the medium's body to the object moved, both in its visible and in its invisible form.

"The visible presence of telepiasmic cords supply objective, black and white proof, that the unseen trance director, 'Y. M.' knew exactly what he was talking about; he said he used cords in bringing about the super-normal ringing of the bell and that when the cameras proved his words to be true. This is both legal and scientific evidence of the first order. The 'Y. M.' intelligence therefore, is a force which cannot be ignored."

The Elizabeth M. telekinetic phenomena centered around the most part about a 12¼-pound wooden table the top covered with luminous paint. In the seances the movements of the table were the most powerful when contacted by the medium's hands and at times it moved from Dr. Hamilton's lap despite his efforts to hold it. At times the combined efforts of two experimenters were unable to hold it.

As the experiments progressed attention was focussed on the non-contact movements of the table and after a few weeks the table raised itself off the floor until a levitation of three to four feet was reached. Table rappings were also associated with this phase of the investigation many of these non-contact rappings manifesting intelligence. This they did in some cases by 98 mainly by rapping on certain letters when the alphabet was being repeated by some one present.

MAY PREDETERMINE ALL CHARACTERISTICS

Three Main Theories Are Advanced on Transmission

MONTREAL—Science offers the hope that soon we shall be able to predetermine the characteristics of our children, stated Dr. Curt Stern, recently named professor of genetics at the University of Munich, who lectured at McGill University on his way back to Germany after giving a series of lectures on genetics at the California Institute of Technology.

His cited three main theories which had been advanced as to how hereditary characteristics were transmitted. One supposed a change of constitution of the chromosomes, a second a complete separation, and the third, which has recently been proved correct by Dr. Stern and his associates, that transmission takes place through an interchange of the paternal and maternal chromosomes in the next generation.

While much information has been gathered, the greatest work under great handicaps, he explained, because the most powerful microscope known cannot give a detailed picture of the chromosome formations which must be studied. But in recent years great advances have been made in that it is now possible to observe living cells and see something of the lines and dots which are the chromosomes.

MONTREAL, March 27—(CP)—The Montreal Foundling and Baby Hospital since its opening more than 90 years ago has reduced its mortality rate from 96 per cent to 4.1 per cent, but recently has met with increasing difficulty in raising funds to carry on its good work. The Montreal Children's Hospital has come to the rescue by taking over the institution, the work to be continued along the same lines as formerly, and the training of children's nurses, it was announced.

Last year's report of the Foundling Hospital said that 2,000 babies were cared and feeding of delicate and sick babies and the care until adoption of abandoned children or abandoned infants as are put in its charge. Since the hospital began it has cared for more than 4,900 babies, and during the past year has arranged adoption of more than 400 children.

Among the important services rendered by the hospital are the teaching of pediatrics to the medical students of McGill University and the training of children's nurses who, known as the Argyle Nurses, from the location of the first hospital on Argyle Avenue, Verdun, are in great demand both in Montreal and further afield.

Canadians Should Eat More Fish Than Now Doing

(Written For The Canadian Press)
(By Stuart McCosker)

Glace Bay, N. S.—One of the big jobs for the fishermen of the Atlantic coast is to coax their fellow countrymen in Canada to eat fish.

If our ten million Canadians each eat a pound of fish a week every fishing boat on the Atlantic and Pacific coast would be busy, handlining, trapping, netting, cleaning, curing and canning. And instead of the Fishermen being "the forgotten men" of the nation, they would be able to live and would get back the pride of the earlier years when he was the 'Good Provider, and everybody would be healthier and have more brains.

Modern science, dieticians and food faddists are chattering up the press with receipts that advise the kitchen fuhr to cook. Most of the receipts are to do with "fixing" and combinations and mixed tastes that rob the basic grub of all its nutriment and charm. And the new housewife is gone, daffy over mixed-bits for her bridge party and is trying out her choice receipts on the whole family.

Every hurry up their aristocratic noses at the mention of salt herring and potatoes, boiled cod, stuffed haddock, fried cod, fried haddock and are infesting the eater with stomach troubles.

The old folks were healthy and hearty, on barley scones, porridge and good fish with a Thursday dinner of corn beef and cabbage, pork in season, a roast of beef when there were too many in the coop and plenty of apple pandowdy and blueberry grunt and lots of butter-milk.

This was the diet that gave them all the vitamins that science is talking us up to, and Vitamin A is really lots of milk and butter and cheese, Vitamin C is fruit (apples and berries), Vitamin B is turnip tops, cabbage, sour kraut, dandelion leaves, and good greens, Vitamin D is fish oil, cod liver oil, halibut liver oil, the oil and fat concentrated in the properly cured salt herring.

All these elements of body building are plentiful and cheap and handy in Nova Scotia and if we get back to the old sensible diet of the early settlers we will be back to health on our own folk who raise apples, and raise, and fish, and grow grains.

With the fresh breeze and strong suns that the Maritime provinces is blessed with and a mile of common sense in the kitchen we can be always much better than we are, and feel much better.

Fish twice a week for everyone would take care of twice the population spreading by our fishermen and make them happy. Try salt herring and potatoes next Friday and get the habit.

Don't skin the potatoes, put the herring and potatoes in a pot of boiling water. When the potato is cooked the herring is cooked.

Try fresh halibut baked or fried. Fresh haddock baked, boiled or broiled and fried.

Haddock stuffed with potatoes, bread crumbs, onions, some summer savory and baked.

Fresh cod boiled, smothered.

Steamed clams, when properly cooked are delicious.

Mussels, rubbed with butter and onions and boiled.

Lobsters, scraped from rocks and stewed.

Oysters stewed, fried or raw.

Lobsters, any way you love them.

Salmon, any way you like it, better, only washed, not split, put in the pot and boiled. Or, if you prefer you into a small hump, the liver melts through the whole fish. A fish is a fish, but the delicacies of the cod and the great value of its liver, North with it.

Swordfish, fried or baked.

Fresh herring, fried.

Two fish foods that are comparatively unknown in Canada, but rich and delicious, are the food value, easy to digest and cheap.

Smelts, fresh, fried, salted, or canned Atlantic sea food. From the salt water mackerel, herring, codfish, dried cod, smoked and kippered haddock or herring, pickled shad, to the canned Salmon and Queen Lobster.

Delicious food, food with all the body building elements and the essential vitamins.

The Atlantic fishermen must get Canada fish consumers to be the only market we have today for lobsters and swordfish in the United States the only market we have for dried and pickled fish is the West Indies. We must encourage a Canadian market.

ORGANIZES RABBIT HUNT

Melbourne, Australia (CP)— The Minister of Education in Victoria state shaw has joyfully gone to the country to lead the school children of rabbits. Crusade against the foe that threatens to eat them out of house and home. Mr. President is now travelling through the country and addressing even residents of the city. He demands a "Rabbit Week." "We must have a State-wide drive," he declared. "Women and children can play their parts. Country school teachers can see that every child may take part in the drives. Something must be done. The fight has passed from the individual; it is national. If we do not hurry and take off our coats, rabbits will have complete control of the primary production of the State." He said poisonous carrots for rabbits and rabbit pells would be the best and most satisfactory aids to keeping the rabbit in check, and would provide much work.

BLIND MAN ON BROADCASTING

Accordeon Played is Very Sensitive to Sound

London (CP)—A blind man has been engaged by the British Broadcasting Corporation to assist in adapting a play for the radio, H. G. Wells' classic story, "The Country of the Blind". George Hayward, London, who has been totally blind since living by playing an accordion in the streets, has been employed. He is 49 years old.

Mr. Wells has read through the play and made various alterations, and he is satisfied that R. J. Kingdon, the producer, can obtain valuable assistance from a man who is actually blind. Among the characters created by George Hayward, with correction all the characters in the play are blind, are a doctor, of course, all the artists taking part have their sight.

Mr. Barnard, who has been blind from the age of 10, possesses exceptional sensitivity to sound. He will be present at rehearsals and his advice will be taken where practicable so as to present listeners in a true broadcast picture of what it is like to be blind. Hayward is quoted in an interview as saying:

"I have learned how to use my ears in place of my eyes. Where there are houses or other objects I can walk with impunity, as I can hear where I am going. Put me in an open space and I am at a loss. This I take it is what the B.B.C. want me to overcome. I am pleased at the chance, and I shall try to assist in giving them the right atmosphere for this broadcast."

While walking along the road with the interviewer Mr. Barnard suddenly stopped and said: "There is something sniffing me up at the back. I can hear it. It's not a car; it must be a barrow." It was in fact, a costermonger's barrow.

BURIAL VAULT IN BACILICA

Most Beautiful Crypt of Work in Montreal Archdiocese

Montreal (CP)—Reputed to be the most beautiful crypt in the world, the burial vaults for the archdiocese of Montreal were solemnly blessed by the archdiocese of Montreal, are nothing short of perfection in their beauty and design, the crypt is being built in the east side of the Basilica of St. James at a cost of $175,000.

The strong iron gates will protect the interior of the burial vaults. Beneath a marble floor, a modern reinforced fighting system adds to the beauty of the crypt. The marble burial vaults, in five of which already repose the bodies of former archbishops. One side, including nine vaults, is reserved for the archbishop and bishops of the province after he is intended for auxiliary bishops.

The final work, a huge plaque of Mgr. Bruchesi, first bishop of Montreal and a power in the diocese between Church and State in the province that "just couldn't be ready to be moved into place. The bust has arrived in the city, but the installation is delayed pending word from the Archbishop Archambeault or Mgr. Georges Cauthier, who is at present recovering from an illness in Paris.

The Basilica of St. James, where the vaults have been built, is the Roman Catholic Cathedral of Montreal. It is modelled after St. Peter's, Rome, being one-quarter the size of the cathedral in the Eternal City.

J. ARMSTRONG IS REMANDED

Charged With Hold-up of Cobourg Cafe on March 16

Cobourg, Ont., March 28 (CP)—Jack Armstrong, 18 year old Welland youth, was remanded to jail for a week when he appeared before Magistrate J. T. Hamilton in police court here, charged with holding up a cafe here on March 16.

Armstrong was arrested over the week-end at the home of his uncle, Albert Armfield, near Port Hope, Chief of Police J. C. Rose of Cobourg and Provincial Constable W. J. Carey made the arrest and also took a rifle, which it is claimed the youth used in the holdup.

James Wong, proprietor of the cafe, identified Armstrong as the youth who forced him to hand over $13 at the point of a gun. Police say Armstrong used a car allegedly stolen from H. Hathaway, of Port Hope.

INSANE MAN IS CAPTURED

Barricades Self in Room With Family of Three

Calgary, March 28—(CP)— An attack with tear gas bombs and the locking of an automatic pistol and of a 45-calibre bullets waged by police to capture Harry Kipnes, cafe proprietor, who defied a dozen police officers from a room in his home, His wife and three children, in the same room, were rescued unhurt.

Kipnes is believed to be insane, according to a police statement.

The battle occurred on Saturday night when police, answering a call for help, telephoned to the station by a woman, went to the Kipnes apartment. A hotel was the answer to a constable's knock on the door. Reinforcements were called.

Even though partly overcome by the tear gas, Kipnes put up a struggle when police broke down the doorway. Several constables narrowly escaped four bullets fired from the pistol.

The pistol was found on the floor. Four bullets were still in the chamber, and the fifth was jammed.

HISTORIC BELL IS AGAIN HEARD

Sydney, N. S. (CP)—Sydney's oldest church bell has had another chapter written into its interesting history. The bell, which sounded for years from the belfry of St. George's Anglican Church, when garrisoned fought troops attended, now calls worshippers to service in Christ Church.

While its origin has been shrouded in the mists of more than a century, tradition has it that the bell once tolled the hours on board a French privateer. When the ship fell into the hands of the British it is supposed to have been taken to Sydney and installed in St. George's where its chimes rang out to the soldiers of the garrison until their withdrawal from Canada.

When Rev. C. E. Whalley assumed charge of St. George's the bell was moved in 1820 to St. Cyprian's Mission at Whitney Pier. Some years ago, the church burned down and the bell, rescued from the flames, has since remained unused. Despite its age—and inscription on the metal shows it was cast in 1710 —its tone is still clear and vibrant as on the day it came out of the mold.

SHAW GETS TASTE OF HIS OWN MEDICINE

San Francisco—George Bernard Shaw has disregarded an invitation to address the Commonwealth Club the organization's officials said last night.

The invitation mailed to the playwright at Shanghai, said no speaker has been paid by the club in its 24 years of existence and "we see no reason for changing this policy," and went on:

"Every President of the United States since McKinley has addressed the Commonwealth Club at least once, which, however, does not preclude Hatemleg to arithmey speaker.

"It is altogether probable that the majority of our membership would not want to hear you at all, but the minority is better organized and therefore extends to you this cordial invitation if you are disposed so to view it."

The letter was signed by Enoch, the Secretary Stuart R. Ward, and this postcript was added:

"Forty-five minutes is about as we are accustomed to stand."

Brought to America by a Halifax Sportsman Placed in Sanctuary

Halifax, (CP)—Northern ptarmigan, brought to Nova Scotia for the first time, have been released in the provincial game sanctuary at Waverley. Fourteen of the wild fowl from Labrador and Newfoundland, Lt. Col. R. H. Wills, Halifax sportsman, who ordered them from the wilds of northern Manitoba.

In that semi-Arctic latitude, the hardy birds drive south with their colors changing twice each year to conform with seasonal changes in the landscape as a means of camouflage. They should, it is expected, find no difficulty in existing in the comparatively warmer climate of Nova Scotia.

Whether they will remain here, however, is problematical. The ptarmigan, migratory in their habits, may forsake the province with the approach of spring and trek northwards to Labrador or Newfoundland. Ptarmigan are found in the northern regions of the Old Colony and the only one of the species ever before found in Nova Scotia is believed to have come from Newfoundland.

LANDLORD HELD RESPONSIBLE IN BALCONY DEFECT

Montreal, March —(CP)—Holding the landlord responsible for a balcony defect that resulted in the fall and death of Yvette Gagnon, Mr. Justice G. Desaulniers of the Superior Court condemned Joseph M. Richards, Montreal landlord, to pay the girl's father, Magloire Gagnon, $591 damages.

Miss Gagnon fell from a balcony at the home of a friend Marie Rose Robert where she had visited which she was leaving gave way. She suffered a fractured skull and died the following day. Gagnon suing for $1,981 declared the balcony was unsafe and this fact had been brought to the attention of the landlord several times. He claimed also that he was entitled to damages for the loss of his daughter's services to him and to his wife who were both ill. Mr. Richards denied that he declared the balcony was in good order but Miss Gagnon's accident was due to her own negligence. Holding the landlord responsible for a defect of construction in the balcony, Mr. Justice Desaulniers dismissed this view but decided, however, as Gagnon had several children, the plaintiffs suffered by the loss of his daughter was moral rather than material and accordingly reduced the claim.

REDUCTION IN POTATO ACREAGE

Fredericton, N.B.— Agricultural officials state the fertilized situation will bring about a reduction in the potato acreage in New Brunswick, this year compared with 1932, when the total planting was less than in the previous year. Growers, who have been hard hit by the general business conditions, are unable to get further credit from the banks for fertilizer, and it is indicated this will have the effect of reducing plantings. . . . . .

Upper Saint John river seed growers withhold estimate of their plantings until it is known whether the Ontario government will put in effect a tariff on seed tubers.

If a tariff is provided, it will undoubtedly have the effect of adding to the general reduction of the potato acreage in the province, according to O. C. Elkin, superintendent of the provincial soils and crops division.

Upwards of 4,000 men every year are imprisoned in Great Britain for debt, chiefly paupers, under maintenance orders to wives and children.

KILL PARTNER ATTACK GIRL

Negro Terrorists Are Being Sought by Bloodhounds

Houston, Texas, March 28 (AP)—William W. Trent, Jr., was brutally slain and Miss Adele Tuxton, 24, was attacked Monday, apparently by Negro terrorists. Both are members of prominent Houston families.

The crime occurred about 12:30 a.m. on the South Street road, between Shoalcrest Boulevard and Bray's Bayou.

Officers, with bloodhounds brought from the City Prison Farm, were on the trail of the slayers of the neighborhood. Other bloodhounds from the State Prison Farm near Sugar Land were en route here.

According to the account given by the hysterical girl, the young couple were sitting in an automobile on the South Street Road when the negroes swung up on each side of the machine. Both were armed. Miss Tuxton and Trent were ordered out of the car.

"I'll shoot you if I told you to hold up your hands," Miss Tuxton quoted one of the negroes as saying.

Almost at the instant the negro spoke, she said, he fired at Trent, who was facing the other negro.

'OUTLET SHOP' HELPS CHARITY BY HANDICRAFT

Society Matrons Manage New Plan to Give 'Work And Relief

NEW YORK—Most everybody can trade something at their outside is it. So, there is the "outlet shop", brine of charity, home of handicraft.

This shop helps themselves, by the shops under which it operates. In two weeks or existence at 446 Madison avenue it has taken in every penny of which went to the needy makers of articles sold. There is no overhead. A hotel company furnishes rent and other space rent light and heat. The emergency employment relief committee furnishes a bookkeeper.

Fifty young society women, under the leadership of Mrs. DePeyster Alexander and Mrs. Young-Keatman, do the work. They went in shifts at each counter, showing the goods to investigators. They dig into their own pockets for any stationery and office supplies. If any one of them turned up the telephone for the work she charges herself a nickel and that eliminates a telephone bill.

The stress is for the gifts and above hands back to the days of war work, era in his workers are given and obeyed as if a payroll existed. Articles sold are those of thrift and anything excepting food products, commotion and clothing. There are oil paintings, drawings, toys, hand-made dolls, fancy pillows, sculpture and a hundred other things.

People helped are mostly persons who could bear charity. Some of them appear to be in comfortable circumstances with big apartments. They are in need of something that they finally are evicted—hence the shop's second boom—within days.

Then was one woman, a friend in need, of the volunteer workers, who had for some time been destitute and dying on her feet. She had a talent for painting. When the shop opened she painted hundreds of donated lamp shades, which she decorated. They are selling as fast as she can paint them.

The dry goods association is one of the chief contributors of raw materials. No case is treated as "charity". Says the shop's motto in the window: "You today — maybe me tomorrow."

One young woman applicant was advised to make haberdashery. When a postcard informed her that send of them had been sold she returned and collected $6.00. She sat down and cried: "This has saved my life."

ARTHUR ROBERTS ALWAYS FAVORED BY YOUNG BLOODS

Dead Comedian in Heyday During Late 19th Century

By Thos. T. Chantler, (Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, March —Arthur Roberts, the comedian, who has died at the age of 81, was one of the last survivors of the glittering days in the social history of Hoxton which made gaiety its motto.

He was a pals of the sewer guys — perhaps we ought to say nights — of 40 or 50 years ago. When the young "bloods" of the town (many of them, unfortunately, became decorous stockbrokers or bankers) were considered they went "down" to Hoxton, except to hear the music-hall pronouncing, drink a dish of pickled whelks and lift, and did everything in season except go home.

Roberts was in his day-day on the Halls when Phil May was doing his best work, and when Dan Leno and "Pink" Dix was the favorite literary men around Piccadilly Circus. Roberts or curiously, Robert celebrity was connected with any of these men. We always associate the memory of George Leybourne (the "Champagne Charlie" and Jenny Hill with Roberts, and Jenny Hill with Sam Hall, the "Public Executioner." Roberts on the hand earned his celebrity through all-round ability and a genius for the absurd impromptu. Like J. L. Toole, his contemporary in a larger scale of entertainment, Roberts was celebrated with the "gag" and "Pink" Dix" was the favorite literary men around Piccadilly Circus. Roberts or curiously, Robert celebrity was connected with any of these men. We always associate the memory of George Leybourne (the "Champagne Charlie" and Jenny Hill with Sam Hall, the "Public Executioner." Roberts on the hand earned his celebrity through all-round ability and a genius for the absurd impromptu. Like J. L. Toole, his contemporary in a larger scale of entertainment, Roberts was celebrated with the "gag"

One of the best recollections of him is when he appeared as a Jap-anese in "Yeoman of the Guard." Toole benefit arranged for Phillip Farmer at Drury Lane. Mr. Toole, author of this gem of operatics, also appeared in the same piece. It was certain that Gilbert would come to see the show on the first night of the piece, even at a benefit performance. Everybody knew that Gilbert hated to see Roberts would be. have himself. For some time he was stationed at the wings, but how. But when that famous Savoyard, Richard D'Oyly Carte, came to call the Judge's song, in a style to fit his own voice, Roberts stood to his ear as if straining to catch his Lordship's words. Then, with a few on an ear-trumpet. A few moments later, seeing shaking his head, he took off his wig, books and hung them on the door of the jury box, along with his gown. "Not to me as seven" The audience, of course was convulsed. Roberts put his seat underneath the Judge, took these articles with him from the scene. Following the performance the irrepressible Roberts wrote Gilbert a letter with a jovial "hope you did not mind, old chap." "Not at all," acidly replied Gilbert. "On the contrary, you nearly made me laugh."

Roberts' last appearances were with the "Gaiety Girl" and "Vanity," who performed intermittently at some of the London Halls. It was hardly to be expected that the present-day public would know much of or him, even though his songs were given in his best comic vein and he was still able to "get it across".

BERET AND FEZ STYLES RELICTS OF CHILDHOOD

Are Copied From Fashions of Basque And Breton Lads

Manchester, England, (C.P.) —A fashion writer in The Manchester Guardian says: "In this matter of millinery women at present in the 40's are experiencing the sensation of entering upon the phase of second childhood somewhat before the appointed time. For one by one we are being called upon to assume, in these our later days, hats of a type which we were, rather more recently, in the innocence of our youth.

"Consider the beret for instance, which as grown-ups we have borne in our horns with—for the past two or three years. Somewhere near the beginning of this century either the Basque or Breton lads, or both, wore it. Berets suited them to a nicety and knew it as a merry one, but with no thought of any Basque significance. In all simplicity they were accepted as berry caps because in their unvarying practical practicality they seemed to resemble the families hips and haws and buxomberries of the hedgerow. Somewhere, too, they were called squills or squill-caps, because of the small cylinder of scarlet felt which protruding from the crown and looking exactly like a red pencil-stump. The "squill" one remembers, afforded a good tweaking hold for brothers and other rough playmates.

Now, the fez again. Mercifully, however, these horrible styles are greatly modified, and the much heralded 1933 version of the fez has apparently suffered so much pinching and tweaking that all hope of our ever seeing the real thing, or the image is on the brain.

MUST GET AWAY FROM BOND OF FEAR

Montreal, (C.P.)—Women not so long ago was limited to the boundaries of the home but now everywhere—except in the province of Quebec—she has broken through all the barriers thrown around her, observed Canon Allan F. Hockin in an address before a local women's club.

"Her freedom," he said, "cannot be hindered any more than man's. She is free to go anywhere, to manifest her interest in everything that concerns humanity."

All measures of prohibition were dangerous, Canon Shafford remarked. The moment a free trade is denied of that they do so. There was also the bondage of the Church to its organizations. Both pleasure and the organization of the church were becoming too complex, as in the case of one parish he knew of where no less than fifteen different societies demanded guidance and in some cases financial assistance.

"We need to reduce our kit and we must do it in much the same way as the soldiers did who were going into action during the Great War," was the Canon's suggestion. "They were told to reduce their kits to 30 pounds, and it was simply a question of discarding what they could do without until the kit weighed that amount and more."

A compass needle does not point to the North Pole, but to the magnetic pole which lies 1,200 miles west of the true North Pole.

CALLS SHOWERS FOR BRIDE UNNECESSARY

Montreal, (C.P.)— Showers for the bride, the stag party for the groom and other marriage customs which are rigorously observed today were regarded as an unnecessary burden by Canon Shatford in an address given before the Montreal West Women's Club when he humorously referred to many customs accepted by everybody but which are absurd when examined logically. He pointed to the enormous expenditure made quite needlessly by the bereaved in burial assistance, which in many cases left them in poverty debt—because they could not do without until the kit weighed that amount and more."

BEACHES SETTLEMENT

Montreal (C.P.)—The Queen Victoria Kitchenan Week Scheme reaching a settlement of a week scale among the pastry, confectionery and bakery workers' union. Dating from May 15 the strip employed by the above mentioned manufactures will be paid for the first six months, a minimum of $12 after six months and one year, $8.50, and after that $10. Wages of this schedule will be available, it is stated, following a year of the agreement, as has been the case in former agreements when presentation of views by representatives of employers and the general public have been s

ACTION IS TAKEN AGAINST 2 MEN

Peterboro, Mar. 27—Two members of the Nu-manna Mining and Production syndicate, Arthur Wilson, aged 48, of Madoc, and Arthur E. Fisher, aged 48, of Toronto, appeared before Magistrate Langley Friday on charges under the Ontario Securities Act.

The charges against the two read: "Unlawfully did trade in a security, to wit, units of Nu-Manna Mining and Production syndicate, at a time when he was not registered as a broker or as a salesman of a registered brokerage, contrary to the provisions of the Securities Act of 1930". With the evidence for the prosecution completed for the first of the stores, the trial was adjourned until Tuesday because Deputy Attorney McSkerry, K.C., desired time.

JIG-SAW A BLESSING

Montreal (CP)—The jig-saw puzzle is a blessing, believes Rev. A. It is also another factor in promoting the simpler life, the minister told the American Women's Club here.

100TH ANNIVERSARY

Newmarket, Ont. (CP)—St. Paul's Church is celebrating the centenary of Anglican services in this neighborhood. The old bell, said to have been the gift of the Countess of Elgin when she visited Newmarket in 1847, still rings only for many years. More recently it became cracked. Three years ago a benefactress purchased a monument weighing 8, and its rich tones pealed out once more. Through the efforts of Sir William Mulock's mother an organ was installed in the year 1872.

Among those buried in the graveyard are the mother of Sir Berkeley Robinson and Christopher Berwick, an old army officer who, it is recorded, died at the age of 113.

A X-ray specialist says that in the 35 years since X-rays were discovered, radiology has advanced faster than any other branch of medicine.

CALIFORNIA STUDIES QUAKE, MODERN BUILDINGS ESCAPE

Only Small Area Affected in Recent Earth Tremor

DATA COLLECTED

During the last year the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey has installed in western United States 16 strong-motion seismographs for the purpose of recording accurate data arising from any earthquake in the area and of the time of the occurrence. Heretofore it has not been possible to obtain faithful records of disturbances on the scene for the reason that all of the important records resulted or the instruments were jarred out of commission.

This is part of a planned nationwide study of earthquakes, extending from the New England States to Texas, from Minnesota to Idaho and to the Coast. First records obtained came from three seismographs in California on the morning of the 10th of March 10. These immediately were forwarded to Washington for study. On the basis of information derived from these and such records as may be obtained elsewhere architects and engineers will arrive at new formulas for construction of strong-er buildings. Both studies are now in progress at Stanford University, California Institute of Technology and Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where earthquakes are being simulated in laboratories in order that their effects on synthetic buildings may be studied.

Although scientists will be unable for several months to render a detailed analysis of the recent disturbance, which in general appeared that it had its origin off the Southern California coast at great depth, that it is not to be classed as a mad, or earthquake, that there is no likelihood of a recurrence for many years.

Modern Buildings Escape Damage.

Also, early inspections revealed that all the large buildings which had been constructed upon modern and scientific lines escaped with only minor damage. This in itself, Mr. Charles B. Hatcherson, director of seismological field survey, pointed out that it had its origin off the Southern California coast at great depth, that it is not to be classed as a mad, or earthquake, that there is no likelihood of a recurrence for many years.

Modern Buildings Escape Damage.

Also, early inspections revealed that all the large buildings which had been constructed upon modern and scientific lines escaped with only minor damage. This in itself, Mr. Charles B. Hatcherson, director of seismological field survey, pointed out that it had its origin off the Southern California coast at great depth, that it is not to be classed as a mad, or earthquake, that there is no likelihood of a recurrence for many years.

"One of our first steps", said J. Lecount, consulting engineer to the bureau of building inspection of San Francisco "was to obtain data on the performances in every section of the United States that has had earthquakes, and in practically every country in the world that has had them on record. Our study has shown that loss of life has been due to falling walls of poorly constructed buildings. The Class A buildings, formerly the tall skyscrapers have given a splendid account of themselves in the recent shocks, and could California will be the safest place in the world certainly for the occupants, as such, in California have been practically free of loss. It has been due to poorly constructed buildings of the lower grades of construction.

"Consequently, the earthquake came at a time when few people were on the streets, when the fire and police forces were open and commerce was practically at a standstill, a most ideal place.

Predicts Small Earthquake

There have been many extensive disturbances made by earthquakes, said Mr. Lecount, and so much unfounded rumor that it was thought best to issue a statement to the press in regarding the earthquakes in Southern California. Dr. Charles Richter, March 10, says a bulletin of Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

At about 5.55 p.m. a tremor that unquestionably was an earthquake originated in the Pacific Ocean and moved successively south Southeast California. Many persons that were nearest the origin of the quake felt it first. Telephone and telegraph communication of all kinds were interrupted, but in the evening communication was followed rumor in rapid succession. At first it was thought that entire communities were razed. Subsequent check the next morning revealed very different picture. The appearing loss of life prematurely announced proved to be a great deal less while the loss of a single life is to be regretted, and one person to minimize the suffering of the 119 who died and the hundreds of others who were injured by a more or less serious degree, the figure is not enormous compared to the total population of approximately three millions who reside in the area.

The loss of buildings in some communities was severe, more than in others. In nearly every case those buildings which were damaged were ones that had been built for many years or were not modern in their construction.

One community with an assessed valuation of $16,000,000 and a population of 14,000 sustained a loss estimated at $25,000,000. Other communities received considerable damage to their business districts which consisted largely of one story buildings rather poorly constructed. The total amount of damage in the entire area is estimated at not to exceed $40,000,000.

Work was begun the next day to clear away the debris. The repair construction program is already well under way. At the writing, March 14, all communities affected have already undertaken the program to reconstruct their buildings not only upon the most modern lines, but also in the modernistic style of architecture for beautification.

In the whole area little damage was sustained by buildings either small or large that were erected within recent years according to the best approved construction. The recessed valuation of Los Angeles and Orange Counties is figured on a basis of less than half the actual value. The assessed valuation of the property damaged or destroyed by the shake is approximately three billion seven hundred million dollars.

Seismologists say that sufficient proof to destroy these buildings which are scheduled to make damage does occur. We have very complete history of earthquakes in the United States covering during the last few centuries, both in this country and abroad, in the form of seismograms of various grades of intensity in various parts of the United States every year.

It may be said that the shock was only moderate intensity, affected only a small area in comparison to the entire country and there is no reason to expect any further shocks in the near future.

Outstanding characters of geologists and engineers as officials, headed by Dr. Harry Wood, former president of the Seismological Society of America and professor of geology at Stanford University, is that these need be no fear of the future if property constructed. If buildings in the future have been built as we now know how to build them, that they would have been right.

Be Checked.

Dr. Wood in a statement said: "Of course, the construction," said Dr. Richards, "is that buildings should be properly designed and built of earth-quake resistant materials. The law of 1925 is responsible for the fact that the buildings destroyed were comparatively few, down, loose cornices and chimneys, and of some brick walls.

Rational Investigation

It is of more than passing interest to know that the rational investigation of the three institutions already mentioned will result in the design of buildings that will withstand earthquakes. Such buildings might be expected anywhere in the world. Engineers have based their calculations mathematical formulae, not on formulae predicated on records of the quake themselves. In this connection the approach to the subject, California engineers have made. Although the vast majority of California buildings withstood the earthquake shocks, the California legislature has considered it necessary to require even safer structures in the future, and has appointed a group of able technical men have been evolving a formula for safer buildings. This will provide the safest and most economical construction for the future.

HOSPITALITY OF LABRADOR FOLK IS WONDERFUL

London, Ont. (CP)—Life in the Canadian Labrador with Harrington Hospital as the centre of a community was described here recently by Dr. Grenfell Hood now on Deception Island and for seven years on the hospital staff at St. Anthony, Labrador there are 30 small villages; straddling, although comfortable by the provincial department of education it still backward and children are few qualified teachers, most of the teaching being done by the young people of the district who have had only elementary schooling.

"The hospitality of the people is wonderful," Dr. Hood said: "Your may only have bread and a baked apple, but it is shared joyfully with their guests." Difficulties of an insufficient supply of fresh water were overcome. There are no wells, and the granite formation of the rocks, the oldest known, defies all efforts. At Harrington they are dependent on rainwater which is caught in cisterns and piped. As far as sales are concerned old overcoats, past all other possible use, are in demand. "They are made into "shoes" for the dogs who suffer from bleeding feet badly by continual trotting on the ice.

ROSLIN ATHLETES PRESENTED WITH HANDSOME GIFTS

Roslin—On Friday evening, March 24th, 1933, the Roslin girls' and boys' softball teams, gave a delightful dance in the Hall in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Elliott. Mr. Clayton Reid and Mr. Jack Cow or Lake, furnished music for the evening.

About 10.30 p.m. Dr. H. E. Wabi-son, the gathering was called to order and Miss Ena Kerr read the following address:

To Hattie and Fred:

This gathering bonded to your home to have to express both in word and action the very high regard in which you are held. When the girls of the softball team learned with surprise, bewail yearning and wist-ful, that you had decided to be together for better or for worse, we felt that it would be necessary to grant you some timely advice and to wish you all that was great and beautiful for your future life together.

We, of course, know your ability on the diamond. We know how to run or to catch, a fly and we feel that in spite of the fact that we wish you to-be a member of our team next year; all will not be well with us unless you improve your batting eye.

We feel that your new state in life will not remove you from us and that we will still benefit from your winning ways, your ready wit, your happy smile.

Knowing this to their heart's re-gret, our boys, who fall by the way-side in their attempts to steal, wish to find that Fred was always the base on which they could fall back on bygones be bygones, wicked also to show that they had many happy wishes to extend to you and to thank you for the recent good time spent at your house.

Therefore on behalf of the Girls' Softball Association we present you with this flower tray and on behalf of the boys we present you with this farm stand.

May they ever be kept full and beautiful not only to lend an added contribution to your already admirable household but to remind you that the young people of Roslin will always remember you and regard you as one of their inner circle.

Signed on behalf of the girls and boys of the community:

Blanche Reid.
Mary Cray.
Aileen Cray.
John Reid.
Horace Palmer.

Miss Mary Cray made the presentation for the girls and Mr. J. Reid for the girls and Mr. Palmer for the boys.

In a few well chosen remarks both Hattie and Fred thanked the girls and boys for the lovely gifts, assuring them of their continued loyalty and support of the teams, and inviting one and all to visit them in their new homes. About midnight a dainty lunch of sandwiches, cake and coffee was served after which dancing was continued until the early morning hours.

TALK OVER DIFFICULTIES

Rhyl, Wales, March.—(CP).—"If you have any difficulties talk them over with somebody, and you will be surprised how it will help you," said R. Wadsworth, presiding magistrate at Rhyl, when Thomas Phil Hughes, a former member of the Rhyl Football Club, appeared on remand on a charge of attempting to commit suicide. His wife, on returning home one day, found him with his head in the gas oven.

It was stated that Hughes was worried about small debts and about having to draw unemployment pay. The case was discharged, and Magistrate Wadsworth said the Court would forgive the costs. Hughes thanked the Bench and expressed regret for his action.

BUCK DRIVES WOLVES OUT

Thrilling Story of Chase Told by Member Before Committee

TORONTO—The thrill of a chase by a pack of wolves after a deer, the fatal kicking habit of the north river vividly transferred by story at the session of the House Committee on Game and Fish at Queen's Park recently. C. E. Gregg, M.P., retrieved, stalwart veteran of the forests, a man who has hunted deer for 40 years, took the committee back two decades to the scene of the battle of wood and wits, and to the howl of the wolf pack in pursuit.

"I was driving along with my horse and buggy, when I heard the unmistakable howl," Mr. Gregg colorfully related. "I had been in that bush many years, but let me tell you I shivered when I heard that cry in broad daylight. My horse heard it, too, and fairly shook in his harness. The appeal of the buck came out from a Tramway area—and wasn't he getting it! Never did a deer travel so fast in my life.

"Then the pack appeared—nine of them—they were about 200 yards behind the buck—a beautiful animal—and as they passed me they were only 100 yards away. Then I saw the buck spread out to another big deer—baying and yelling in full pursuit as I observed when I heard their

DRAFT AGENDA IS APPROVED

Premier MacDonald Will Preside Over Economic Conference

GENEVA—The Expert Preparatory Commission has completed the draft tentative agenda for the World Economic and Monetary Conference which is to meet in London under the presidency of Premier Ramsay MacDonald, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.

The draft agenda has been approved by the Council of the League, which felt, however, that it could not fix the date of the Conference. There was need for further preparatory work, and, in any event, an interval of three months was required to enable the draft agenda to be communicated to the governments of the world. While, therefore, the conference cannot meet before the 1st of April, the Council considered that it could not be unduly postponed. The organizing committee of the Council, over which Sir John Simon presides, will meet again within the next three months to fix the date.

The Expert Preparatory Commission, in the report containing the agenda, which is addressed to the Council and which has been approved and circulated, draws attention to the existing state of the world situation, and particularly to the "period of suffering and destitution" through which many nations are passing and growing unemployment. In the present circumstances, declared by the colleges of prices, the disorganization of production, the accumulation of stocks. They note that international trade has "been reduced to incredibly low proportions." The dislocation has "only point to a complete breakdown of the old methods" which throttle business. There is a fatal vicious circle at work which must be ended if "the social system as we know it" is to survive.

In the program which the experts propose for the Conference, "inter-governmental debts find no place," as the experts note that until this question is settled, debts "will remain an insuperable barrier to economic recovery." In connection they accordingly urge early negotiations on this problem. The other questions to be considered by the conference are summarized as follows:

1. Monetary and Credit Policy: The objective is declared to be the restoration of the gold standard as international monetary standard, to make this possible, a great measure of economic and financial confidence must be restored, and adequate credit must be provided against a rise in prices.

West Responds to Prices.

2. Commercial Policy: Air travel on the level of world prices is highly desirable. It might be aided by a general policy of easy money designed to promote a healthy expansion of business. The regulation of exports or productions of certain primary commodities is further settled to be considered. But any tie in prices can only be maintained by "a general level of commodity prices such as would follow from the abolition of restrictions and the restoration of financial confidence."

3. Exchange Restrictions: The abolition of exchange restrictions, "as rapidly and completely as circumstances allow." An effort should be made to secure the progressive abolition of exchange control policies imposed during the crisis. Governments should "avoid understandings which are moderation and stabilization of tariff prices."

This program the experts describe as "a comprehensive program of world reconstruction." And they believe that, if the governments are willing to undertake it, and also to settle the political questions lying beyond the scope of the conference, confidence and prosperity can be restored.

PLAY SUCCEEDED FOR IMMORALITY

French Actors, Actresses Called Flops by Professor

MONTREAL—Odell Stead, Alfred Lambert, de Peraudy, Coquelin and Monnet-Sully—considered among the best actors and actresses France has produced—were just "flops" in Montreal, Professor Gustave du Roure, of McGill University, told L'Alliance Francaise here. The reason, he said, was the "marked quality of the people"—people—towards even the best lighthearted stage presentation, and the fact that portion of the elite which enjoys French theatre is not considerably sufficient to make a tour by an outstanding French stage personality a financial success.

Only Sarah Bernhardt and Rejane, of the great French actors and actresses who visited Montreal, were "box-office successes," the speaker stated. The reason was not because they toured in better plays than their equally well-known contemporaries but "because they presented plays which were selected to by those in charge or supposedly in charge of public morals." Accusation of immorality against the play presented by Bernhardt and Rejane were the "raison d'etre" of the success of these two stars, Prof. du Roure held.

The speaker paid tribute to the French being shown by the Radio Theatre—Monsoneff's only professional stock company playing in French—which by modern standards, he declared plays, making locally trained performers and actresses, with other players trained in France and by running a theatre in the busy centre of the residential section of "le peuple" was achieving a result "essentially pleasing."

WHITE GIRLS SAFE LIVING IN CHINA

Useless Appearing To Be Wealthy Is Unrelated.

NEW YORK—Miss Helen Chapin, Boston art student, believes a lone white girl may travel safely through the interior of China or Japan. Unless she appears to be wealthy, she will be unmolested, she said on her return here from such a trip.

The Oriental man regards the white girl as being of inevitably outside his world so far as a flirtation is concerned," she said. Miss Chapin lived unchaperoned for seven months last year in a house attached to an old temple at Miss Kicks, China, with five Oriental men, she said.

"I'd not say we were safe, we were annoyed me with as much as a biological glance," she said. She spent her time studying Buddhism and the art of writing with a brush, the other members of the household being two priests, two acolytes and an art student.

The only thing that disturbed her in that extraordinary household, she said, was the fact that she was afraid of taking a sun bath in the nude every day near her door and her bath. But she got used to that, she said.

NO CHINESE ARE IN THE BREAD LINES

SEATTLE—The laundry business is terrible, Ah Say, counsellor of Coon Dip, Chinese criminal and China-town's leader, explained why.

"There are 2,000 Chinese in Seattle' he said, "and possibly only half of them have jobs. Some of them are depending on clansmen, American customers, Caucasian friends who make his income on the Chinese, but we still cling to what you call the patriarchal system. We do what our fathers tell us to do.

"Most of us live stingerly and bank our savings with the merchants. The merchants put our money where they please; perhaps in stocks in their shops, perhaps in the banks. When they put it in the banks they keep the interest. It only compensates them for having to keep it safe. We don't expect interest and we don't ask for it. We get our money when we ask for it. It is unthinkable that we wouldn't."

The consul said it isn't the depression that furnishes conversational topics but the Japanese invasion of Jehol. "We are worried about the war, you," Coon said, "not about the depression. The Chinese have had many depressions."

DOG SLEDS ARE STILL POPULAR

Out Inventions of Science For Travel in Far North

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont.—Despite the fact aeroplanes and automobiles play an important part in modern northern transportation, the humble sleigh dog still holds an important place, particularly for a quick trip to police and patrol work. When winter lays down its blanket of snow over Algoma district, the hardy mongrel canine once his investigation of science, and defeats motor car and other means of locomotion, in making a way through snowbound forest roads and trails. The dog is also a good companion during the long winter months.

In winter the dog team reigns supreme in the north and nowhere is it more in evidence than in the operations of the Department of Game and Fisheries, whose district wardens are charged with the task of patrolling the vast reaches of Algoma district.

Each warden patrols 2,000 square miles during the winter months, through snow-drifts and unbroken trail, in sub-zero weather. Only by means of dog and toboggan could they penetrate the bush in all directions in search of poachers and illegal trappers.

The warden's time, however, is not all given to apprehending the wrong-doer and discovering illegal trap lines. Befriending their fellow residents of the bush also comes into their work.

In the diary of F. LeCage, of Jackfish, turned in to the district superintendent, Department of Game and Fisheries, Kirkes, Ontario, that while on patrol he learned the wife of a trapper was expecting. He mushed many miles into the woods, secured the trapper and brought him to his wife's bedside. In another instance, while on patrol, he found telegraph cable had blown a sick man in a bunk. After carrying for the sick trapper, he bundled him on his toboggan, carried him over the long winding trail to a railroad station, where a train bore the sick man to hospital and doctor's care.

A patrol in the snow-laden territory of Chapleau Game Reserve claimed the life of Warden Clovis Le Planch, of Lebrand. Although he successfully completed his patrol, the tedious journey sapped his strength and he caught cold, later developing pneumonia.

The diaries of the wardens are framed in cryptic and laconic terms, using sparse words to describe long and hard patrols, and invariably mention the dogs. On patrols of four and five days the wardens merely write "camped with the dogs for the night", presenting a picture, however, of the wardens getting blankets and sleeping bags laid out in the shelter of tall timbers, caring for their dogs, and finally settling down for the night in the snow to await morning and continuance of the journey.

The diary of M. D. Worth, game warden stationed at Oba, tells in terse fashion of a patrol through Ranger Lake Game Reserve, carried out in company of two other wardens. The patrol lasted twelve days and more than 100 miles of bush country was surveyed by the wardens, who had been advised poachers were at work in that section of the reserve. After 12 days of tedious journey—especially for the dogs who had to "break trail"—the patrol was satisfied there were no poachers in the district. At any rate for the time being.

Sadcuay, most people go his public life, especially hoping to make things better.—Lady Astor.

APPROVES OF CENSORSHIP

Church Leaders Commend Idea of Government Perusal

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—Commending the views of M. N. Nichols, president of the Canadian Press, in the matter of objectional newspapers and periodicals flooding Canada from outside sources, church leaders in New Brunswick support the plea, made in an address at Montreal for establishment of a department of censorship at Ottawa.

"It is a pleasure to be able to agree with him in his tribute to the cleanliness of the newspaper services of The Canadian Press," said St. Rev. J. A. Richardson, who, as Bishop of Fredericton, is head of the Church of England in New Brunswick. "It is one of the features of press publicity of which every Canadian is justly proud."

Bishop Richardson expressed himself as being heartily in accord with everything Mr. Nichols had said.

"It is reasonably certain," remarked the Bishop, "that the only effective means of combatting this evil is a department of censorship under federal control, although many thoughtful persons are likely to shrink from the establishment of such a board.

"It is so extremely difficult for a department of censorship to exercise its arbitrary powers without sometimes making very serious blunders. The United States has, I think, such a department, and it is a common knowledge that by its action certain classics, and even works of fiction, have been forbidden entrance to that country on the most indefensible grounds.

"One remembers, too, the ban that was placed for some time, at least, upon a novel that, while not a book for children, could wisely be placed in the hands of the very young men in valuable contribution to the understanding of the problems that are presented to students of 'psychology and to other thoughtful persons.

"Yet blunders of that sort must not blind us to the vast importance of protection of the public, and, in particular, people of immature mind, against the moral dangers that are beyond all doubt inherent in the dissemination of newspapers and magazines of a certain sort."

Contention Justified.

"It is hardly open to question, therefore, that Mr. Nichols' plea for the establishment of a department of censorship is fully justified and deserves the support of all right thinking people. Were the weaknesses of such a system of censorship are conceding with the value of the work that it would undoubtedly do, there ought to be no hesitation in undertaking it," concluded Bishop Richardson.

The suggestion of Mr. Nichols concerning a department of censorship at Ottawa has been indorsed by Lenten should meet with the approval of all lovers of clean literature, Rev. Father T. J. Dolan, Roman Catholic Bishop of Saint John, N.B., is certainly in line with the policy of the Catholic Church which, through her general councils and Popes, from the very beginning issued decrees forbidding the reading of immoral books.

"Unscrupulous publishing firms and booksellers, in connection with booklets, tabloids and Sunday newspapers filled with sentimental slush and sex immorality. Newsstands and book-counters on our street corners are piled high with periodicals that corrupt the youth of our country. In some of our leading libraries where books may be rented at a nominal fee, boys and girls have access to novels that are nothing more than purveyors of indecencies to

HOLLANDERS MUST PUMP OR PERISH

Fight an Endless Battle Against Encroaching of the Sea

HOLLAND—Pump — or perish seems to be the motto of the people of Holland. Much of their land has been won from the sea, and they have had to fight an endless battle to keep it. But here, as everywhere else, there are lazy folks. And there have always been ways of "outing" these folks, particularly tramps and beggars.

Quite often these "parasites" were seized and put into a pit. Above this was a water-pipe with a tap, and at the bottom was a pump. When the killer was safely in, the tap was turned on, slowly filling the pit. The man inside might shout and grow angry, but he could not climb out nor stop the water.

Before long he had to either pump the water out or drown. Invariably he chose the former which meant hard work. After a couple of hours of this he was pulled out, wet and weary, and told to go on. And he always went—quickly.

SWEDISH SPORTS HAVE GREAT DAY

Ten Thousand Spectators See Outstanding Programme

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The Swedish winter sports enthusiasts jubilantly acclaimed February 19 as of the greatest days in the history of Swedish winter sports. First of all, there was the fact that there were as many brilliant victories in three Scandinavian capitals—Stockholm, Helsingfors and Oslo against picked Finnish and Norwegian teams with the results of 3 to 0 in favor of Sweden, or together 17 to 5 in favor of the three leading nations.

Secondly, the "Vasa run", the historic Swedish ski race between Mora and Sarila, a strenuous run of about 90 kilometres, was a great success with 10,000 spectators and 1000 participators. The "Vasa run" commemorates one of the most dramatic episodes in Sweden's history when more than 400 years ago Gustavus Vasa, called the founder of modern Sweden, was recalled by the Dalecarlians to lead them against the invaders, who threatened to enslave the entire country. The young Vasa was about to leave his country for ever but was halted the last minute by two of Dalecarlia's best skirunners at the village of Sarlem on the Norwegian frontier.

The Vasa run covers the same track and is the leading annual winter sports event. This year the contestants started in a temperature of 25 degrees centigrade below zero. The first prize-winner, Arthur Haggblad from the northern Swedish town of Umeaa, covered the distance in less than six hours and was jubilantly greeted by the thousands of spectators at the goal on the village of Mora, where a pretty Dalecarlian maiden in the picturesque provincial costume ran to meet the victor, placing a large laurel-wreath around his neck.

A Cornell University student who is studying the travel habits and feeding range of five sparrows identifies the birds by gay curity colored feathers which she has fastened to their tails.

ROCK TOWER HELD IN AWE

Curious Natural Formations Appeal to The Indians

MATTICE, Ont. — Throughout Canada are many curious natural formations which appealed to the Indians as evidence of the supernatural. Their imagination peopled the vicinity of great falls, gorges and canyons, and shaded rocks with spirits over which ruled their gods. As in more enlightened climes where gifts were offered to propitiate certain gods, the simple Indians offered up his treasures to procure the care and guidance of the spirits which hovered over the virtual shrines which lay along his path. One of these places where Indian "medicine" was offered to Mattice stands in the rushing flood of the Mattagami river in Northern Ontario, a tower of rock known from time immemorial as Onjburn's House.

Near Onjburn's House the turbulent Mattagami is hemmed in by high walls of gneiss between which the stream dashes with tremendous velocity. Hard against the rocky fastness of Onjburn's House the river hurls its might only to be divided, turned aside and madly rush onward to double in foam and spray over the falls below. Alone in its splendor stands this extraordinary columnar pillar rising 60 to 70 feet above the water. Traveling, passing by canoe down the Mattagami to Hudson Bay pass this awe inspiring monument of nature as they portage past the rapids 32 miles north of the railway. Standing on the brink of the steep-walled canyon, they look down on the huge rock, the present day traveler appreciates some of the awe and wonder that moved the Indians at this place, and may feel some of the hidden things which the northland holds as its own.

CROWN'S ACTIVITY IS ALL-EMBRACING

Even Runs Stud Farm in County Kildare, Ireland

BY GEORGE HAMBLETON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON—His Majesty's Britannic Government engages in some odd enterprises. It's not all gold and glitter in Whitehall with statements on high policy before the old brass-bound bar in the House of Commons. A series of "trading accounts" tabled in Parliament tell a quite different story.

In Coomrey, where Edward I built the greatest of his feudal fortresses to check the Welsh, the Ministry of Agriculture now clean mussels. And contrary to the record of most enterprises, it made a profit last season of $904. Nor does the Ministry of Agriculture confine its trading to mussel-cleaning. Strangest of all, it runs a stud farm in County Kildare on Irish Free State. Here are bred the highest class of Connemara pony horses. But horse-breeding doesn't do as well as cleaning mussels. Losses are increasing. The last annual report shows a loss of $96,976 although profits accumulated prior to 1933 leave a neat sum of $380,186 in hand. In Scotland, the Ministry runs a similar stud holding colonies: in England, it has farm settlement schemes for ex-servicemen.

The Dominion's Office is interested in phosphate deposits in the South Seat.

The Board of Education sells plaster casts of museum works of art but, alas, for the last two years at a loss.

In the New Forest—where William the Conqueror once enforced his forest laws with ruthless repression—forest workers now placidly till allotments of Crown lands.

BRITISH GRAIN WILL BE SHOWN

Specimens From Harpenden Will Feature Regina Exhibition

LONDON — Specimens of wheat grown on the same ground for 80 years in succession will be one of the features of a historical and educational exhibit arranged by the Rothamsted Experimental Station at Harpenden, for the World Grain Conference and Exhibition at Regina in July and August.

It is expected that the exhibit, which will also demonstrate by models and graphs the effect of the extended research into the cultivation of potatoes, mangolds and other crops, will be presented by the Rothamsted Station to a Canadian University.

From the United Kingdom some fifty entries have already been received for the competitive classes in which the prizes total 25,000. Britain's manufacturers are exhibiting machinery and other products in the trade sections. This is the first occasion on which an exhibition of British goods has been displayed so far west in Canada as Regina.

FEWER MARRIAGES

New York (CP)—The Marriage License Bureau reported that during the first days of the bank holiday it had little effect on couples contemplating matrimony. The number of licenses issued during the first week of Lent this year was 1117 fewer than last year, only 353 being issued this year. But brides and bridegrooms on their honeymoons found it very dull — all resorts and hotels were so swept to the hotel, or back home, as prospects for a long stay, the entertainment, did not seem bright.

TELLS AMUSING TALES OF SHOP OF USED DRESSES

old Dress to Wife of England's Premier as New

LONDON—(CP)—Lady Asquith of Yarnbury, wife of the former premier, was at one stage of her career Cynthia Lesley, a shop girl in the dress department of a fashionable London store who earned the "rag" or gown trade. Accordingly, part of her new book, entitled Autobiography, "Pen and Pencil Pictures," deals with her own shop experiences. The gowns she sold were not new, but were the cast-off garments of fashionable women who came to the shop to sell their clothes.

Lady Asquith admires the sense of humour of the humble and democratic Mrs. Brown, whose husband was Ring Brown, a well-known Bolshevik during the Socialist regime.

Mrs. Brown she met when she was looking up her cottage before going to Holyrood. If she were not so occupied, the thought of meeting Mary, Queen of Scots' ghost would have terrified her, she says, thinking it will be more of a shock to her to see me there."

Mrs. Brown, as it happened that morning, brought in a frock of my own, and I had to buy it back at a price. It was of a depressing plum colour, trimmed with bead passementerie, and I hated it! But I was ready to dispose of it on any price, and never have worn it again, had happened I saw Mrs. Baldwin trying on one of the papers' creations in my frock."

Lady Asquith's life brought her into contact with many distinguished occupants of the Victorian and Edwardian era, and remarks in passing that she found stage stars very easy to work for. "They paid their bills promptly, which is more than can be said for some people." One Mrs. Drummond-Hay, and one Mrs. Campbell, who has a good memory for faces but not for names, and who, it is said, took Mrs. Cheyne-Swanson at a Hollywood function and inquired after news of her: "Are you in pictures, too?" Mrs. Pat is fond of telling stories against herself.

HOTEL DESTROYED FOR PARKING AREA

Historic Hostelry Housed Royalty And Famous men In Early Days

MONTREAL—Old and historic St. Lawrence Hall, the cynosure of a century ago Montreal's most luxurious hostelry, the centre of social life and the rendezvous of the leading politicians of the day, is to be torn down.

Canadian Pacific Railway Company, owner of the down-town property, has called tenders for demolition of the old hotel to make room for a parking area.

It was the scene of the vice-regal balls of pre-Confederation days. King Edward VII, when Prince of Wales, stayed there when he came to Montreal in 1853 to open the Victoria Bridge. In later years the St. Lawrence Hall was the centre from which the leaders of the Confederate States worked against the Union. Jeff. Davis, the Confederate leader, himself refused to believe the slavery states had been beaten. Many a meeting between Sir John Macdonald, Canada's first prime minister, and the Hon. George Cartier, the French-Canadian leader, was held there.

The hotel, gradually declining in prestige as the luxurious up-town hotels were built, functioned until only a few years ago and it is little more than 7 months ago that the St. Lawrence Hall tavern, last vestige of the famous hostel, was forced to close its doors.

Let us remember that in social structures as well as in organisms the most scientific is also those which grow and mature most rapidly.—Albert Schweitzer.

TORONTO HYDRO SELL UNCLAIMED ELECTRIC GOODS

Owners Refuse Notices to Call For Articles Listed

TORONTO — (CP)—Every five years or so the Hydro holds a sale of unclaimed goods—articles left behind or left in their repair shop and never called for. Vacuum cleaners, electric irons, toasters, radios, lamps and percolators, a host of nifty little aids to home keeping, some of them running up as high as $70 or $80 in value, land in the shop for the sale. Here are some examples: Nearly five years ago a lady rushed over from a downtown hotel with her pet iron. Got to have it fixed in a hurry. It's still there—and nobody can find the lady. Another lady left both oven units out of his stove and forgot to call for them. And it's still there—with the family apparently scattered to the four winds. Radio tack back home.

There are about 12 electric irons, some repaired and some not. Lots of these things there's nothing at all to pay on from the repairing counter. They simply won't take—'em back. There are lots from Belleville, laid driers from Orillia and grills from Orangeville. Two vacuum cleaners, scurling tongs, with the hands of the once rollicking curlers apparently lost to popularity for ever—electric heating pad for the family hypochondriac and electric fans that once cooled families now relegated with the octogenarians.

Registered letters are sent out, and advertisements published, all to no avail. One man remarked "refused" when the letter came. The unclaimed goods will be sold at the end of March.

WANT FURNITURE PLAIN

LONDON—"Everyone wants furniture to be as plain and flat as possible," said a manufacturer at the Olympia Fair, who is bringing out admirably designed English, utilitarian furniture at lower prices than if it were imported from the Continent or foreign countries. Most of the furniture, indeed, is flat-topped. It achieves, by simplicity of line or curve, a distinction that is apt to be lost if the flat handles are colored or obtrusive."

There is no such thing as scientific progress in the sense of quantity of lessons' money.—Bernard M. Baruch.

ADOPT ONE-WOMAN SPORTS

Girls Prefer Individual Sports to Team Work

BALTIMORE, MD.—(CP)—A noticeable recent tendency among the Goucher College students, has been to lose interest in the team sports and take up the forms of athletics which can be indulged in by the girls individually. In the past year or so there has been a falling off in the number of students who chose to play basketball, hockey, baseball and volley ball, and a proportionate increase in the total of those going in for the "one-woman sports."

The head of the Department of Physical Education said: "One reason for the change is undoubtedly that we are now getting the girls who are products of the progressive schools, which stress individual and home sex very unpleasant. — Ibsen.

Changes are the essence of life are new, and few of their graduates have attained colleges age until recently.

"On the other hand, it may show one of the faults in present-day education—the lack of social traits, inability to do teamwork. That is the trend and perhaps that is why the girls like them better, X am not just sure why they do, I suppose, but then no one ever is sure why girls do things."

It costs much less to make a thing well than to turn out a shoddy article.—Henry Ford.

"THE STORE OF FASHION"

FEATHERS ADD A NICE TOUCH

Smart Women Want to Be Adorned Not Merely Dressed

PARIS—A mode of elegance for the winter of 1933 is launched by Lucien Lelong this spring. The French designer chooses the day of sophisticated simplicity is done and that "smart women want to be not merely dressed but adorned."

Rich fabrics, gay colors, bright jewels and fabulous feathers depend in the mode he launches for 1933. A dress of black velvet is enhanced by emerald green, jade, crimson, blue and grey are among outstanding colors, while fabrics include sapphire satins, summer velvets, rich crepes and colorful flower prints in harmoniously blended tones. The silhouette he favors is a close, slender line, leaving the figure free to move unhampered. The waistline is placed at its natural line.

Feathers add a feminine touch to many evening gowns and wraps.

Afternoon clothes likewise reflect the elegance mode. Printed silk crepe frocks worn with short capes are a prominent feature. Among outstanding creations is one which combines a black satin frock having touches of emerald green on the bodice with a short cape of emerald green wool.

NO ELECTION FOR PAST 14 YEARS

Mayor States No Money in Job And Nobody Wants It

RALEIGH, N.C.—(CP) — A political oligarchy reigns in Garysburg, Northampton County, population of only a few hundred. There hasn't been a municipal election in 14 years, and the rumor is that the Mayor will not consent to such foolish things.

The mayor is W. H. Joyner, senator from Northampton County. He contended elections cost money and everyone seemed to be satisfied "as long as things are going along all right."

If an alderman dies or moves or gets tired of his job, Joyner appoints another. Joyner said a lot of people in Garysburg were relatives of his and they'd run for office. "Same me for Mayor as anyone else," he said how much the job paid, he said, "not a cent. Maybe that's why nobody wants it."

JAMAICA TRADE OUGHT TO GROW

Canadian Visitors See Great Possibilities of Trade Development

KINGSTON, Jamaica—Canadians who have visited Jamaica during recent weeks have seen great possibilities for trade development with Canada, it is reported by Philip Lee, Secretary of the Canada Development Board.

Interviewed here, C. Fairall Fisher, President and Managing Director of the Windsor Company Limited, Montreal, said: "There are great possibilities for more trade between Canada and Jamaica on account of the preferential tariffs passed at the Imperial Conference at Ottawa." Robert Caldwell, owner of the Iroquois Publishing Co., Iroquois, Ont., remarked:

"The people of Canada are only conscious at the present time with trade because on it rests their future, and the business men are especially desirous of developing their trade with the 'British West Indies.'"

He was referring to the Ottawa Trade Agreements "were going to work out to the best advantage of the people in the Empire. It really would be beneficial to Canadians and Jamaicans if point of view in Canada," Mr. Caldwell remarked.

W. G. Wright, Canadian business man visiting here in the interests of several Canadian manufacturers, states: "There undoubtedly is a market for Canadian goods. Canadian manufacturers should be represented by a market for Canadian goods. Canadian manufacturers should be represented by a market; for Canadian manufacturers should be represented by a market; for Canadian manufacturers should be represented by a market; for

by E. J. Hemingway

When Maurice Oxnard entered his lawyer's conspicuously furnished office in response to an urgent request from the administrator of his late grandfather's estate, he realized that it would be a young man's game with five million dollars. He expected a half hour later, when the detected air of a man worth just the past eighty years and only recently discovered about his grandfather's wealth, to be quite changed. He has made inquiries. The estate seized, of course, belongs to him.

Maurice was the only son of doctor's like a drunken quail. Somehow he managed to find his way to the street and into a cab. Through the turmoil of his mind he realized that he had an afternoon engagement with his fiancee, Sylvia Standish.

He decided that he would inform her at once of his changed status. Certainly she had a right to know, and she would be delighted with the match. Her father's millions were at least double the sum Maurice has he had just been perfectly comfortable, he thought, with sudden cheer, fly-ing to Sylvia's side and asking her to wed. They could try to make a go of it by living on his income. Love in a cottage, etc.

Yes, Maurice admitted that she had told Maurice frankly that to the best of her belief she couldn't like him if she were poor.

"I've fought poverty all my life and I'm tired of it," she had declared once said. "I want permanent protection from the wolf at the door. The man I marry must give me that. It's more important than love to me."

That classified Maurice. A gold-digger, by her own admission.

Sylvia had just dismissed a caller when Maurice arrived. She had just said, being him into the library when she was ushered in. Her face, he knew, had no shine in speaking his little piece.

"I love you," he grinned. "To the last cent. I'll have to pawn two cups and saucer, three of the spoons and then hunt up a job."

Sylvia paled. "When did you find out?"

"Hardly an hour ago." He reached for her hand and pressed it. "But don't you worry now. We'll get along. We'll have to live a bit snugly at the beginning, but I'll make good in your sight."

She pulled her hand away. "But you don't realize anything, Maurice. This has happened so suddenly. I—I must think about it."

"Sylvia!" Maurice's smile vanished. "Does it make a difference?"

"I'm afraid it must make a difference."

"But you weren't marrying me for my money, were you?"

"Of course not," said Sylvia coldly, "whether you wish to marry me or not."

Maurice was clenching his hands behind him. He was not quite white. "I get it. Our engagement is off. We release each other."

Sylvia's head was bowed as he turned on his heel and departed.

The following morning several newspaper pouring printed the news. Maurice Oxnard, Wall Street, and girl had jilted him. He needed a job. In a few terse, picturesque sentences he told the tragic story.

At noon Maurice received his first caller. The bell rang.

The instant she entered the room she knew him. His memory served that he had an afternoon engagement with his fiancee, Sylvia Standish.

20 Per Cent Reduction in Ontario Ridings Announced by Premier Henry

That redistribution of the Ontario Legislature is a certainty this year, and that the reduction will be in the neighborhood of 20 per cent. from the present 112 members in the Legislature," was the assertion of Premier Henry, when interviewed by a caucus of Conservative members in Queen's Park, yesterday. Sixty-three seats are likely to go, under this plan.

Toronto Globe says:

"Several details were discussed at the caucus of which the Premier Henry stated to The Globe. "We have agreed on redistribution, that the Government is behind it; the Government will go ahead with it and will be on a basis of 20 per cent." Mr. Henry did not say when the bill would be brought down, but the probability is that it will reach the House early next week when the bill be sent to a special committee, where the actual carving out of the seats will take place. Mr. Henry did indicate, however, that the details would be left to the Special Committee. This is of course, taken to mean that the Premier knowledge that the committee will be overwhelmingly controlled by Government men who will be hand-picked by the Government.

Two in Twelve.

"Among the seats slated to disappear are the two Toronto seats, that coupled by George Gillies, K.C., and Dr. Forbes Godfrey, and Wright, Davenport, Hamilton and others, seats are to be eliminated, also while it is known that one London seat and one in the Windsor area, either a Windsor seat or one may also go.

"In Northern Ontario, it is reported that Algoma and Manitoulin are to become one, while a readjustment will probably be made in the Nipissing and Rainy River constituencies, further reducing the number.

"In Western Ontario, the ridings which will probably be eliminated include that of Brant, represented by Hon. Harry Nixon, Progressive leader, and that of Bruce, who are expected to be consolidated. In Eastern Ontario the ridings to be eliminated are Prescott, which is to disappear, and there is to be a readjustment of the two Hastings constituencies, Prince Edward, Lennox and Addington, Glengarry and the Shuffle, Leeds and Grenville, will also likely be readjusted.

"In the more central districts, the ridings will probably go are Ontario North and one of the three seats for Ontario West, Waterloo North and South being combined.

Other Changes.

"Other ridings which may become extinct before redistribution, one of which may go to Wellington North-east, and one of the Perths. This would provide for the elimination of some nineteen ridings, and the other will go will probably include the other Eastern Ontario one, it being said that Hon. Peter Heenan for the cleared there.

"The above-mentioned ridings, Victoria North has a population of but 14,176 while Victoria South has 17,665, Brant has 19,317; Dufferin 14,822; Elgin East 16,917, and Elgin West 16,736; Lennox and Addington, East, North and West have 16,197, 14,941, and 14,941, respectively.

"Bailey River has 17,374 and Kenora 20,267 while the other Northern Ontario ridings affected are Nipissing 21,575, Cochrane North 17,230, Larsen North and South have 13,412 and 17,444, respectively. The Toronto seats opening for the fourth Eastern Ontario seat is No. while Toronto Centre, Toronto North has 14,194, while Perth South has 16,241. Prince Edward county has 15,823. Sturgeon Falls is another Northern Ontario seat which may be affected, as it has but 17,218. It will be noticed that all of the seats mentioned have less than 20,000 population under the units of 22,000 for rural ridings and 50,000 for cities."

Severe Reprisals

It was generally predict whether the government would interfere. Boycotts already in effect in several countries against Germany were being tolerated by the government.

The boycott campaign meanwhile was taken up by the Nazi Storm Troops (the Hitler Guard) organization. Only 150 men were detailed to each shop with orders to release last night of 1,200 who had been jailed. Others were ordered to the barracks in the Steel Helmet headquarters.

Those still in custody were described as Leftist leaders. The Hitler storm troops, who fought side by side with the Steel Helmeters to establish the Hitler regime, have shared police duties with them since, had been ordered to "shoot to kill" any more than 1,000 former Reichsbanner (Republican Storm Troops) men to oust the Nazis.

Companionship of the moose from the time "Baby" was deserted by its parents, in the brightest part of Joe's 32 years in the northern wilderness, was, who incompletely adds: "He was closer than a brother."

But Joe just can't forget "Baby" who was "as gentle as a child."

Together they trailed the old miner's long lines through the woods and Joe would tend his traps while "Baby" would romp on the snow. Joe's pet would eat, caress and always warned by pushing the tongue between the teeth and barring. Though to strangers it might have sounded like the "raspberry" it was music and caution to Joe.

"Baby" was a great companion around the miner's little shack. But once he learned to open the door Joe's troubles began. It took much for Joe to preserve the contents because "Baby" always tried during "open spaces" and was a little clumsy when inside.

Ilderton Bank Manager Seriously Injured, Spent Bullet Hits Assistant

GET NO LOOT

Car Used in Attempted Hold-up Stolen Short Time Before

Ilderton, Ont., March 29 (CP)— Two employees of the Canadian Bank of Commerce were wounded in a gun battle with two bandits here today when an attempt was made to hold up the Canadian Bank of Commerce here. Neither the explosion of shots the bandits fled in a car without any money.

M. Pentreath, manager of the bank, was seriously injured by a spent bullet in the abdomen and Lloyd Denning, assistant in the bank, was wounded in the shoulder by a spent bullet.

The two men drove up to the bank in an automobile and upon entering the bank flourishing guns ordered the staff and employees to "stick 'em up."

Instead of complying, Pentreath reached for his gun and the bandits opened fire, wounding him.

Hasty Flight

After an exchange of shots, the gunmen ran from the bank without loot. They dived at top speed into their car, already there a third man standing on the running board of the machine, and sped away in the direction of London, apparently in full courage possible pursuit.

Police in this city were sent to London and county police and doctors were immediately notified. The wounded manager is pronounced critical and he is being taken to London by ambulance.

Following the attack, Denning reported to Chief Constable Allen who him slightly from his cost, where it was sought.

The car used in the attempted robbery and hold-up was a Chevrolet sedan, bearing plates V-1771. The number was taken as the car sped down the Dundas Street, London.

The car was stolen from Dundas Street, London, shortly before the hold-up.

Over 30 Bullets Fired

Driving up to the bank in a closed auto stolen from Dundas street, London, the bandits entered the two employees to "stick 'em up" but they were foiled by the presence of a gun in Denning's hand.

Pentreath and Denning followed and Portious fell wounded to the floor while the gunmen hurriedly continued firing lead into his prostrate form. Over 30 bullets in all, despite a slight chest wound and succeeded in driving the men from the bank and in the getaway car.

More than a score of bullets were fired during the gun battle between the bandits and the bank staff.

Mrs. Pentreath, wife of the manager, is also in the bank at the time of the attempted hold-up. She was not injured.

It was only a quirk of fate that prevented Paisley from getting in the line of fire of the bullets from the gunmen arrived. He had left the bank, but had been delayed, "I guess I'm a lucky guy," said Fuller, "for I would have been right alongside from a big pail of money.

Fuller is known to have followers all over Ontario, having started as starter at many fair fairs.

Dr. Christie, O.A.C. Pleads for Better Relationships in Urban, Rural Communities

Kiwanis Club Hosts to Farmer Friends of Community

LARGE ATTENDANCE

Farmers Must Get Increased Prices For Products Says Speaker

Relationship between the urban and rural communities were further stressed on Tuesday when the Kiwanis Club were hosts to their farmer friends from the immediate district. Dr. George Christie, principal of Ontario Agricultural College, was guest speaker. The special speaker. There were more than 100 present at the luncheon which is an annual affair of the Kiwanis Club and proved to be better attended than has been staged by the club than the one of Tuesday. Mr. Earle Lazier, president of the club presided, while the invocation was given by Rev. Mr. Gerrie. Contributed to those fortunate to hold a wonderful, valuable harvest, they being handy for the spring cleaning for around every corner. Those who acted as song leader and as guests the Bath Orchestra provided a delightful programme of old time dance tunes. Leo B. Rapley added at the piano. The speaker of the day was ably introduced by Jim Ostrom, who said most of the programmes committees and appreciation for the splendid address he voiced by Col. Roscoe Vandervoort, B.A., D.V.O., one of the guests. In the absence of Mr. Ostrom, the business he was to follow and presided over by Kiwanians Georgs Griffin, W. J. Taylor, Thurlow Gal Hall, Gordon Hall, Wesley Orser, Claude D. Tice, W. C. Mikel, Arthur Wills, Chesley Allard, Fred Deacon, Joe Smith, Mel-die Logan, R. D. Wallbridge, Ed. Riggs, Jr., Harry Vanderburgh, John Pearson, John McIntosh and Merrick Bellhouse.

Wm. Peake, Jr., Kiwanis Club Tuesday on better relationships between urban and rural communities.

On to Peterboro

Eddie Logan, in charge of the inter-city visit to Peterboro on Thursday, April 13th, announced that peaty twenty had signified their intention of making the trip. Oshawa and Lindsay clubs will send delegations. The Lion Club of this City and a bowling tournament for which Eddie Logan is donating a cup will be held between the different clubs. F. C. MacLaurin will be the guest speaker. Those who are not going to Peterboro, remember that they can participate by attending the directors' luncheon each Thursday noon. Attendance at this trip will get their attendance at the inter-city meeting. All members be invited to go and make it a real old time party with our Peterboro friends.

Dr. Christie, who has spoken in this city on several occasions was given an enthusiastic welcome and in opening said it was a pleasure to be back to the work of Kiwanis in fostering better relationships between the rural communities. They have attempted in a serious way to bring about these relationships and there has been a helpful work and is another part of the work of Dr. Christie. These are troublesome times and people are asking many questions and the solution will only be through our own efforts. Previous to the need for that agricultural products should be increased in price. Only 30 million bushels of wheat were produced in Canada last year and the price was low of a song and the loaves but little for the farmer. Dr. Christie was interested and other necessities. Milk, eggs and other products of the farm are not getting where the farmer can even make a fair profit.

Price Out Difference

The speaker pointed out the great difference in price of food products compared to agricultural implements in the years 1913 and 1932. A single walking plow sold in 1932 for $21.50 as against $11.50 in 1913. In 1932, 350 pounds of milk would have to be delivered to buy a binder which took 1796 pounds to pay for the binder in the year 1913. This comparison was traced through a wagon, binder, mower and seed drill and with every one the comparison was about the same. The reduction in the price of implements has been in the years mentioned, about 50 per cent. The farmer who has had to take a cut or as high as 80 per cent. On machinery at auction sales is demanding a high price for the farmer is taking the loss and refuses to put the machinery on the farm and making it do as they have done in previous years. The cost of transporting home from the farm during the year 1929 by carload lots was 11½ cents a cwt. while today it is 29 cents or exactly the same and the truck charges is the same as 10 years ago. In 1930 the farmer was getting $2.30 a cwt. for his milk and today he is getting $1.15 a cwt. for milk and they were selling for $2.80 a cwt. while today the price is $1.60 a cwt. although the price had gone up in the past few days.

Dr. Christie dealt with the scheme now before the U.S. Congress for Agriculture respecting the reduction of land and the farmer being paid on a bonus and he stated that the scheme is next to impossible to work out. "It is not a question of reducing," said the speaker but rather to get enough of the farm to keep the wheels turning and the farmer can only lead to a big surplus. At one time the world was using 100 million bushels of wheat and why is it not capable of using the same amount now?" asking the same and he answered that question by stating the buying power is not in the hands of the people that need the wheat. Dr. Christie told of the farmer, who was not breeding his sows but starting to feed pigs, the right way to tackle the proposition. The right way is to breed sows so as to have the litters come reasonably large and the pigs you can raise and keep on feeding for the farmer himself to get into the pig market when it is in a position to get the best price the market is down. The better way is to raise an equal number all the time. The same is true in all lines of farming. The speaker closed by calling upon the farmer to do his best, work earnestly at the job and everything will come right. "There must be close co-operation between the farmer and the dweller in the city," said the speaker, and they can help each other more than any government can do for them, although the government can help at other times bad problems such as our friend Dr. Tolmie has had to solve. Saskatchewan and also from Harper-Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, and 1857 respectively. These were given as the final tonnage and are as follows.

Retrospect and Prospect

"The present moment is one of great interest. But how small will that distress appear when we look back upon it from a point forty years; a war, compared with which all others are but child's play. Repudiation, such as the most heavily taxed people in the world would not have conceived; a debt larger than all the public debts of the civilized in the world added together; the currency imprudently debased, the precious metals locked up in the vaults of the banks. Remember that in 1700 the country poorer than in 1700? Yet all the improvement of her rulers. She has been almost constantly becoming richer and richer. Now and then there has been a check, a gap, now and then a short retrogression; but as to the general progress there can be no question. A single breaker may recede but the tide steadily is coming in.

"If we were to prophesy that in the year 1970 a population of 200 millions, better fed, clad and lodged than the present 100 millions, will cover these islands—that machines constructed on principles not yet dreamed of will be in every house—that our debt was at a figure to us will appear incredible to our grandchildren, many people would say that such a thing is beyond prophesying, but this we say: If any person had told the Parliament which met after the crash of 1720 that in the next 200 years the country would surpass their wildest dreams—that stagecoaches would run from London to Edinburgh in 10 hours—that men would be in the habit of talking to each other at distances beginning to ride without horses—that hundreds of miles would pass in much credit to the prediction, as they agreed a very short time ago.

"We cannot absolutely prove that these are to error who tell us that the material capital of the late Mr. R. Dunning, Carmilton, on Thursday.

Arthur Gibson, Ottawa, Speaker at St. Andrew's Men's Club

LANTERN SLIDES

John St. Club Guests of St. Andrew's at Luncheon

Insidiously, but irresistibly, in their inexorable march, the insect regiments, which sweep from one coast to another, encroaching foot by foot, allies in their irresistible march of insatiable lusts, insects of all classes of classified varieties on this country an economic loss in the neighborhood of many hundred millions of dollars a year.

Such was the problem of control, which was presented to members of St. Andrew's Men's Club who attended a dinner to the church Tuesday evening, and who had as their speaker Arthur Gibson, Bird Street Church Mrm's Club, at the informal affair. The problem was presented by Mr. Arthur Gibson, Chief Dominion Entomologist, Ottawa, who was the guest speaker of the evening. Mr. Gibson, who has been in attendance listened to the highest authority of insect life in this country.

In non technical language, the chief dealt with the home of insects who controls the battle of insect versus man. Throughout the whole Dominion was enlivened by startling battle scenes, which were shown.

Science Now Seeks to Control

Science now seeks to control the muddy ditch at the side of the road, each cubic foot of water which contains 1,000 breeds mosquitoes by the hundreds of thousands. To the roaring fire of the forest, the daily summer-time country wide fires are common. And from the tiniest plant louse to the great locust, insects are legion.

Even the house plant, the corn plant or even the fruit tree with some pest, the needs only the clear eye of the expert to discover how to multiply and produce.

Against these pestilentious men, advised of the arrival of the Great Leopold, who courted and conquered the Belgian Congo in October 1,239, waited with grim looks and set teeth, the insect hosts, the chief to cook, and then carefully examined the specimens. Many of their unproductive search had ended in failure, but the chief was pleased with a rosean bill, a bright slim with government specimen's banner less looking bouquet of flowers on the table in the airship. Inspection proved that the bulbs of the plant were alive with a peculiar pest, that has been found extensively, or even suppressed to a point, where they could be easily combated, and could be counted on the fingers of one hand; the number who has done, can be counted in the thousands.

In Staggering Numbers

Difficulty of control, it was pointed out, is hampered greatly by the fecundity of the female of all species. Lets concentrated by most of nature, spicids, those little plant lice so hardly known to us and so often on house plants, would reproduce so quickly, that they would fill the bulk of the earth in two years, were hoppers by eggs so tinkly, that they have been computed to the square foot of Manitoba soil; in Haldiman County corn borer eggs have been found 420,000 to the acre. But, nature's needs man, as well as his most deadly enemy. Only through atmospheric changes which kill millions of eggs, leaving those survivors, with each change, could even hope to hold them in check.

"It is a well known fact," explained Mr. Gibson, "that one of the insects are the least harmful. Every bug is not a potato bug. Pests, that enter the country by devious means, become acclimated to their new home, and, thus they have no natural enemies or parasites. Breeding rapidly under the favorable conditions, and soon assume staggering numbers. That's when trouble begins."

Pests Are Not This Country

"How do they get in this country, these big-bodied?" was one question. Many dollars worth of foods and forests before those who think them can really see a pest in the field?"

By devious ways, he explained. From Central Europe in a consignment of broom straw that was landed at a point in Ontario, almost unnoticed by such a shipment is received on the eastern coast of the United States the corn borer, most feared pest in America, appeared in past at present spread unchecked throughout the continent, until two nations, with puzzled brows, finally organized laboratory levies and equipment to control them. It has been a long and bitter fight, and the last fatal year since corn first started to wilt and die.

Entering into the country, somewhere among their effects have the plant or seed that is infected with some pest, that

ADVERTISING IN NEWSPAPERS

The great value of newspaper advertising is stressed in an article in the Hamilton Spectator which refers to the importance this plays in English cities' development. "In the Mother Country the value of this medium has always been recognized and it is obvious from recent happenings as reported in the daily press, that business interests have lost none of their faith in it. The Spectator refers to the London Times with its business advertising as an example" in the remarkable results achieved by a famous holiday resort on the south coast of England—the famous old town of Hastings and its neighbor, St. Leonards—through judicious use of the columns of the press. In the last ten years, it is reported, no less than two million pounds sterling has been spent on improvements in those cities, adding to their amenities from the tourist point of view. Because Hastings is an historic old place, with attractions of a unique character. As the scene of the battle which established the ascendency of William the Conqueror, and the site of numerous relics of Norman-French days, combined with favorable climatic conditions, the place would doubtless enjoy considerable patronage in any event. But "the policy adopted by the Hastings council of making known the town's attractions through newspaper advertising" is credited with an increase of 10,000 more visitors to the town in 1931 and an increase of 33 per cent. in motorists. Fourteen thousand direct replies were received to advertisements, it is said, 90 per cent. of which are attributed to newspaper advertising. So successful has the forty days' campaign been, the large financial outlays on improvements, before referred to, it has been found possible to reduce the borough rates by three pence in the pound. Clearly, advertising pays, and pays well."

EARS AND NOSE AID THE EYE

Do you read these words with your eyes alone? Or do your ears, nose, tongue and the sense of touch all help?

Of course, you can not taste a newspaper or a book except figuratively, but that you can is to give a different appearance as well as flavour to the page before you.

The connection between different senses has long been discussed by physiological psychologists. Some interesting recent experiments at Berlin by Dr. George W. Hartmann, of Pennsylvania State College, are thus described by Marjorie Van de Water in Science News-Letter, a Science Service publication (Washington):

"It appears that there may be good scientific foundation for the old saw about pinching oneself to make sure of the reality of what is seen.

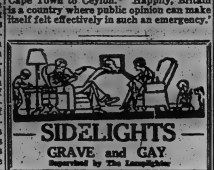
"The beautiful play of colors which accompanies orchestral selections in many theatres may not only delight the eye, but also make the music sound more lively. And the bright color of the rose may intensify your pleasure in its scent.

"Whiff of rose from a bottle of that mosquito-chaser, oil of citronella, will make your sight keener, he found. So also will the very disagreeable odor of xylenol, which resembles carbolic acid, a strong disinfectant. And the sound of a whistle, the pressure of a hammer against your hand, are also helpful to vision.

"You may not be aware that your sight is improved by these signals to your other senses.

"Some of those who took part in the experiment were conscious of the improvement; others complained that the 'distractions' so encouraged them from doing their best. But the test results told the same story of greater keenness of vision, despite reports to the contrary, individual thought he was accomplishing."

One test is made with two movable black and white squares, the one far away. They are brought so close that the observer sees them as one. Then a shrill whistle is sounded and he sees the white line that separates them.



Another test is with complementary color images—for instance, the red spot that you see after gazing at a green spot, and then looking at a gray or dull white surface. When the red spot begins to fade, hold a vibrating tuning fork to your ear. The spot brightens perceptibly.

SHADOWS OVER WESTMINSTER ABBEY

"Britons the world over will understand the horror which fills the hearts of the London County Council when they contemplate the mere shadow cast on the office building made invade Parliament Square, perhaps overtopping Westminster Abbey. The Council will fight the proposal with every weapon in their possession. They will have behind them the support of the entire English-speaking world," says the Montreal Star.

"Parliament Square, with the House of Parliament and the Abbey belongs to the nation; nay, more, to the world. There lies the heart of the Empire. Those few acres of ground have been consecrated by British traditions. The spectacle of churches blanked out by skyscrapers is always pathetic, as witness Trinity Church at Wall Street and Broadway. In the case of Westminster Abbey, it is unthinkable.

"A few property owners may suffer some loss, perhaps, if they are not permitted to utilize space to the limit of economic possibilities. But must they make their dividends from historic ground? It would be a thousand times better for the nation to expropriate the land, if necessary. It is impossible that the Council should fail in their determination to end the plan. Property values will pour in from Northwest Territories to Tasmania, from Cape Town to Ceylon. Happily, Britain is a country where public opinion can make itself felt effectively in such an emergency."

TEA WITH YOU

Without, cold rain
And clouds unkind,
A bitter menace
In the wind.

As I came down
The frowning street,
I felt that life
Was but a cheat.

The bitterness
And cold crept in
My mind, with thoughts
Of strife and sin.

Ah, what a change!
Your opening door
Reveals bright realms
Of joy once more!

Winter without;
But spring inside,
With all the best
Which seemed denied.

In firelight's glow,
Where candles bloom,
At tea with you
I laugh at gloom!

REMARKABLY LOW PRICES have prevailed for some time now in various commodities necessary to every day life, but there are indications now that the price trend has started upward. This may be bound to do, sooner or later, as it has from time immemorial, cycles of low prices being succeeded by rising prices. With this in view it seems particularly timely that the Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville should stage this particular time to stage a three-day carnival of money-saving values in every department of merchandise. Thrift does not mean hoarding money, rather does it mean spending money to the best advantage and dollars saved in a bargain carnival of this kind means a real privileged investment.

"HE MAKETH ME TO LIE DOWN IN GREEN PASTURES" He leadeth me beside the still waters"—symbolizes the atmosphere of the Canadian Women's Press Club in Toronto during the week when Richard B. Harrison, noted colored actor, who plays the part of The Lord in "The Green Pastures" was the guest of honor of the women across the cup of tea. Mr. Harrison told the press women that "One thing the negro is solid on—his religion. He believes in God and he believes in God. "The Green Pastures' represents that belief, and we play it as sincerely and conscientiously as we know how." Mr. Harrison said it had been his ambition since "The Green Pastures" opened in New York early in February, 1930, to play under the British flag. His first stage performance in Toronto he thrilled with pride as he heard the orchestra play the National Anthem. "It brought back memories of the days when I learned to sing 'God Save the Queen' in old Waterloo school in London, Ontario." "The Green Pastures" company numbers ninety-six and it has given 1,250 performances, a record only surpassed by "Uncle Tom's Cabin" with a company of twelve.

JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS, one of the most talented and popular actors in the United States for the past fifty years, is dead at the age of seventy-three. He appeared as leading man with many leading lights of the stage, including Lillian Russell. Throughout a variety of actors he first appeared on the stage as a child of five and during his half century in the profession visited almost every country. His adventures making very interesting reading in his own book which many Belleville people have read, it being in the Corby Public Library. His last important role was in "The Royal Family" in 1928, but he continued to take part in stage productions in Newark, New Jersey, near his home up to a few weeks ago.

RELATION OF THOUGHTS AND WORD PROCESS

How Does Your Skull Stand This Relationship Test?

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health And Personality

Words, thoughts, ideas—all are related somehow to one's thought processes.

There is no such thing as a single isolated thought, hidden away, in the mass of nerve cells that constitute the brain, as was located in the occipital lobe of the brain at the back of the head. Another such center is on the left side of the brain; ability to reason resides in the front lobes, behind the forehead; and so on.

What interests us particularly in the "Relationship Test" which follows is the fact that we are beginning to think of a similar relationship, when each one part of a thought-idea is given bodies one other word, which must control the missing relationship word that is required to supply himself.

For example, the relationship of one to two is the same as the relationship of five to ten. In spite of mathematical progression, the second of each pair of words being one unit more than the first; while in geometrical progression the relationship of one to two is the same as that of four to eight.

However, when I say that the relationship of dog to hair is the same as that of chicken to feathers between fish and scales, I am not dealing with numerical increases of one, or multiples. I am only making a thinking instead of the outside protective covering of the lower members of the animal kingdom.

If one will get the idea in which the type or relationships is always the same, then a list of numbers not even mentioning one is to be used as five is to six, but also twenty is to twenty-five, and thirty is to thirty-five, the test would be too simple. When each relationship changes, however, and the subject who is being tested must constantly shift his point of view, so to speak, and must needs search in his storehouse of memory for the right word to complete the relationship, then the thinking process is actually being taxed.

Here is the following list of 20 relationships. You are to supply the missing relationship.

Dr. Black's Daily Health Hint

Approximately one-third of what children eat is used for the building up of tissues and for their growth. In proportion, then, they should eat more than adults. Over-eating, however, is distinctly bad, as is eating between meals or at bedtime. Candy and sweets should only be allowed immediately after a meal. If a child is over-excited from play, he should rest before going to the table.

TAX PREPAYMENT

Belleville, Ontario Intelligencer,
Dear Sir,—

I would like to express my opinion on a subject which I think should be discussed, and of which many probably have the same opinion.

Why are we farmers in the present condition of affairs not given an unequal competition in our buying and selling? Everyone will admit that Canada can not as many trade relations as the United States, Canada, as the other dominions? Is it because the present government are not up to date and standard, and Australia and New Zealand being still more behind? Britain trade from the United Kingdom has been increased, because customs duties are off the gold standard, Britain, Australia and New Zealand can buy more food products from them, and at the same time sell more to farmers. This she will naturally do. She will not buy as much from us. She is not capable of exchange to get over and thereby help the farmers. Why should we not also get off the gold standard, and let our dollar drop to its proper purchasing power.

The world must cut taxes and expenses on a good many cases. This extra income would help put the budget right. I do not think it is why we farmers cannot afford to pay taxes, because we can raise our porridge and other foods.

I think the only solution that we have to buy continually being taxed, when we have a surplus, and then to throw it in the lap of luxury have investments in other countries that are not paying. Let us make Canada on the gold standard, even though she is not ready for it, and she should go

DISEASE EATS INTO NATION

But No Law to Prevent Propagation of Unfit Likely

Toronto, March 28 (CP)—The Ontario Government will not bring down legislation directed at preventing the propagation of the mentally unfit during the present session, Dr. J. M. Robb, Minister of Health, said today.

Before members of the Toronto Academy of Medicine the right, Dr. Herbert A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, described the present state of society as a "problem of racial degeneration manifesting itself in mental and physical defects problematic of a disease that is eating into the heart of the nation," he said it could be counteracted by state action only.

Dr. Robb said he was not privileged to discuss the health department's forward programme on a matter that has been recognized by the Minister and his officials as an important one for some time. Dr Robb said the department made a study of the problem of the mentally unfit and has compiled a great deal of important information.

Belleville Merchants' Carnival

A notable event in the history of Belleville is scheduled for Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week when the Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville will entertain a host of friends and patrons from far and near with a feast of money-saving values in all lines of merchandise. This is the second annual event of the kind, intended to widen the area which now regards Belleville as the natural shopping centre and demonstrate to a larger clientele that Belleville is the natural and best shopping centre for all the territory served by the splendid roads which lead into the city. Last year "Three Happy Days" which inaugurated the annual carnival of bargains, was an outstanding success and advertised Belleville far and wide as progressive and up-to-the-minute. This year greater efforts have been made to provide a program which will please everybody and make this Carnival of Bargains long to be remembered.

It is no longer a secret that prices, having reached rock bottom in many lines, are now on the up grade and it is the part of wisdom and thrift to take time by the forelock and stock up on seasonable before prices climb.

For this Carnival of Bargains Belleville merchants have arranged decided money-saving values in every line—sans profit—plus good will.

Elsewhere in this paper will be found the program of special events which will feature this Merchants' Carnival, also the interesting advertisements of the various merchants participating and full details of the many bargains to be offered during the three days. A list of the merchants participating will also be found on another page.

Much time has been spared to make this the greatest merchandising event in the history of Belleville and one which will give pleasure and profit to thousands of people. Belleville Bigger Bargain Days—Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 30, 31, and April 1, 1933.

RELIEF BILL IS CARRIED

Liberal Leader Opposes Bill at Every Stage

Ottawa, March 28 (CP)— With the contentious relief bill finally approved the House of Commons removes debate on the Budget. Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, will be the first speaker and will reply to the attacks made on the government's financial administration last week by Hon. J. L. Ralston (Lib. Shelburne-Queens) and C. G. Cousins (U.F.A. Macleod) the Opposition financial critics.

Up to the very last minute Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, continued to protest against the relief bill. Just before it received third reading last night he re-stated his objections to it and insisted on a roll call to show what saw the government a majority of seven. Progressives and all with the government and three Laborites joined the Liberals in voting against the bill and thus helped to make the legislation now in effect for another year and adds to the extraordinary powers reposed in the government.

Mr. King had two chief objections to the bill. The powers given the government and proposed powers of borrow and good government" in Canada, were dictatorial powers, he claimed.

There was no need for a dictatorship in Canada. Canada's people in the past had been content to place their trust in parliamentary institutions and the destruction of power of parliament was a retrograde step.

System Entirely Wrong

Further he claimed the system under which relief is administered is entirely wrong. The Dominion contributed money to the provinces who spend it as they chose. The principle of responsibility was lacking as one authority raised the money and another spent it. This encouraged the provinces to embark on projects which they would not ordinarily undertake just to secure dominion funds and enabled them to retain services, which their own tax revenues would not support.

Unless a change was made the country would go bankrupt, Mackenzie's credit would be seriously impaired by this unco-ordinated spending.

Passing of a bill to amend the Dominion notes act to permit the government to suspend gold payments on Canadian currency gave rise to a general discussion of the currency question. Apart from the standard. There was little contention about it and the bill received third reading with opposition.

As a prelude to the passing of a bill clothing the ministry with power to suspend if necessary gold redemption of Dominion notes the Prime Minister reiterated his opposition to currency inflation and championed gold as a metallic base. And he announced: "The country is at the present moment has reached a margin of borrowing which, under the ordinary rules that govern, is almost its maximum power and less have a rapidly increased population or natural resources that are being developed rapidly."

Repudiating his arguments by describing a one dollar Dominion note, the Prime Minister said that apart from gold confidence was the important factor behind a nation's currency.

A general round-table economic discussion, developed when Hon. James Malcolm former Minister of Trade and Commerce asked the Prime Minister what objections he had to paying for Federal construction works by currency.

A $6,000,000 building might be paid in cash, non bonds and the currency relief over a 10-year period.

SECESSION IS NOT WANTED

"Crude And Futile Experiment" Is The Opinion of One

Perth, Western Australia, March 28 (CP)—Cable—Past and present Prime Ministers of the Australian Commonwealth led the attack in the parliament proposed secession of the State of West Australia from the Commonwealth.

"A crude and futile experiment," was the description given by Rt. Hon. William Morris Hughes, Australia's wartime Prime Minister, to the secession plan put forward by sections in the state, who say the presidential policy backed by the big eastern states as harmful to Western Australia, which—the Western Canada—is chiefly a producer of primary agricultural and pastoral commodities.

In the state capital here Prime Minister Joseph A. Lyons, head of the Australian United Party Government, continued his strong campaign at the voters prepared for the referendum to be held in a few weeks' time.

Former Prime Minister Hughes, in an address broadcast from Canberra, the Australian capital, declared the secession policy was a policy of despair initiated by Sir Henry Braddon, who was Labor Prime Minister of Australia until 1909. Parly's victory Blade over a year ago.

"Secession," he added "would be a costly and retrograde step."

VACANT HOUSE IS DAMAGED

Mischievous boys or transients are thought to have caused considerable damage to a vacant residence on Bridge Ave. The owner of the house informed the police this morning that recently the empty house has been apparently broken into and fully $25.00 damage done to the inside fixtures. The trouble will be further investigated.

COPPER SOLD ON CONTINENT

International Nickel in a Strong Financial Position

Toronto, March 28 (CP)—International Nickel Company of Canada, Ltd., has been successful in marketing its copper in Europe since the four cents per pound duty imposed in June, 1932, barred its output from the United States, President Robert C. Stanley told the company's shareholders in annual meeting here today.

Mr. Stanley reviewed the company's operations in 1932, pointing out that while struggling through the third year of the depression the company was able to maintain unbroken a 21-years' record of dividend payments on the preferred stock. At all of the end of last year, he said, net current assets exceeded the figure at the close of 1931 by $407,727.05.

Reference was made to the balance sheet recently issued showing the aggregate amount of cash and government and other securities, as of December 31, 1932, exceeding the corresponding figures of December 31, 1932, by $2,611,060.34. Net operating income for the year, the president, was $2,523,563.38, prior to reserving $2,192,671.23 for depreciation and mine depletion. The president strong cash position was attributed by the president to liquidation of inventories and receivables.

Sales of nickel in all forms in 1932 were less by 38 per cent. than in 1931 and less by 72 per cent. than in 1929. Touching on the outlook for the copper industry the president said:

"Since the futility of artificial price fixing has been demonstrated, producers now discover that a higher or respect for the law of supply and demand and the adoption of improved merchandising methods are the more natural cures for the basic troubles of the current price situation. Even so any real prosperity for the copper industry must await the return of improved business conditions."

Referring to the establishment of a nickel sales bureau in Japan the president said: "The Japanese bureau, staffed by Japanese, is organized and functions along the same lines as our bureaus in Europe. Your management believes that the Far East afford a potential outlet for a substantial tonnage of nickel bearing products."

The address closes with the announcement that nickel sales have shown an improvement since last summer.

THE BUDGET

New York, March 28 (CP)—Commenting on the Canadian Budget the New York Journal of Commerce remarks it is of interest to state:

"The 5 per cent levy in certain cases on interest payable to foreigners by Canadian debtors will not greatly affect American holders of Canadian bonds in that general government issues are exempt from this tax and that corporate governments in force between Canada and United States will allow interest to deduct tax payments where made from their taxable income.

"The two measures relative to sterling valuation in export and import trade may have a very important bearing on our foreign trade. Sterling is now to be valued at $4.25 for purposes of the dumping duty, instead of the $4.40 which prevailed previously. This will reduce the duty paid one of British goods and hence tend to increase the competition of such goods with American products in the Canadian market.

"The government proposes to establish a stabilization fund to aid agricultural exports to Great Britain whereby exporters will be paid the difference between the price actually received and the pound sterling value at $4.40. This measure may serve to bring increased returns to producers but it may also bring about lower world prices for the commodities concerned."

30th Wedding Anniversary Joyous and Happy Occasion

Mr. And Mrs. B. Springer Hosts to Many Friends

Children and children's children, together with relatives and invited friends gathered Sunday evening, March 26th, to pay their respects to Mr. and Mrs. B. Springer, 10 Metra street east, on the occasion of their thirtieth wedding anniversary, which is the first event of the kind to be celebrated among the Jewish people of Belleville.

According to Jewish custom, the happily-married couple together with children and grandchildren, attended in a synagogue ceremony. With lighted tapers in hand they proceeded around the beautifully decorated table till they reached the appointed places of the host and hostess. There they stopped and when the hundredth guest was seated the blessing was pronounced by Rabbi Gerstel.

Happy Occasion

The occasion was a memorable and happy one. Fragrant bouquets of colorful spring blooms gave the table and jewelry rooms an inviting air. The artistic color scheme was carried out in pink and blue. A delicious chicken supper was served to the guests. At the head of the table beside the host and hostess sat Mr. M. Fienberg, Toronto, a well-known and eloquent speaker, who was chairman for the occasion. In an interesting address, Mr. Fienberg reviewed the life of Mr. and Mrs. Springer. Mr. Fienberg, speaking of Jewish affairs in general, called attention to the Toronto meeting in protest of treatment of Jews in Germany and urged that the Jews be holy a similar meeting. Congratulatory messages were delivered by Mr. J. Berger, Mr. Sam Kroch, Mr. Joseph Diamond and others, conveying the good wishes of friends to the happy married couple and expressing hopes for their continued health, happiness and prosperity.

Among these was the gift of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Belleville, Mrs. Springer being a charter member, in handsome silver tea service, as a token of the affection and esteem of her associates.

For the remainder of the evening dancing was enjoyed by the guests, an orchestra being in attendance for the occasion.

Leaving After The Introduction

Let us suppose that Miss Allen and Mr. Lee have been at a party, have been introduced, have had a casual chat, and that now Mr. Lee is departing. He comes up to Miss Allen, they shake hands he bows gallantly and they both say a few gracious "Good-bye". That is all that is necessary for a casual leave-taking after an introduction.

He may, if he wishes, say more. For instance "Good-by, Miss Allen . . I am very glad to have met you." Or which she may reply, "Thank you. I enjoyed so much our talk together."

Or, if they found each other especially congenial, he might say, "Good-by, Miss Allen, I hope that I am to have the pleasure of seeing you again soon." To this she may say, "Thank you. I hope, too, that we will meet again soon."

And this pleasant brook may lead to sity ocean!

Second-Hand Wife

by

KATHLEEN NORRIS

"Darling!" Flora argued, "there isn't any happiness in this for you."

A bitter smile twisted the girl's mouth; she shut the book and put it on the table beside her bed.

"Is that all?" she asked ironically. And as her mother did not answer she added, in a gentler tone, laying her hand affectionately on the older woman's hand, "I'm sorry, Flora dear. I'm not exactly enjoying it, as it is."

"Then you ought to stop it honey," I know."

"And you are going to?"

"You mean, get out of Cavendish Aesthetics?"

"Why, don't you think?"

Sandra was silent a long minute. Then she said, simply:

"It's all I have."

There was a forlornness, a weariness, and helplessness in her aspect that caused Flora to look at her daughter for a moment. Sandra's face was thinner and paler than it had been a few weeks ago; her eyes were set in dark hollows. Pity for her daughter swept through Flora.

The days began to go by, she lifelessly dark winter, and always began with artificial light in the dark back bedroom and moved on to a lighted office, and were ended with artificial light everywhere, a green light in a round hood hanging over the desk in the back office. Lights dimly alive in the shadows of the back room and glaring boldly over the thoroughfares where Flora was not aware of Rockville. Sandra felt a dreary need of darkness, solitude.

She would look at her mother thoughtfully when Flora was not aware of her scrutiny. If it was not for her mother she could run away from it all, for her mother's thirsted for escape.

Sandra in her new Carter Cavendish had gone to New York for a spring visit all three weeks. There was a great blankness in the office; a great blankness everywhere.

"Why am I sitting at this dull, meaningless desk doing this perfectly unnecessary work?" Sandra would ask herself as the long afternoons dragged by. "Why, let's there say leisure or beauty or dignity in say life? What does a person like Betty Cavendish do that she should have it all?"

One day Mrs. Cavendish came into the office. She was beautifully groomed as always, a damp, rich curve of dark hair set immovably upon the careful pouches and cream of her cheek, her little hat drawn down smartly, her furs, her suit, her shoes perfection. She asked confidently for "Frank Bartlett," and stared, while she waited, directly at Sandra without the faintest flicker of recognition in her amiably smiling face.

"I'll see if Mr. Francis Bartlett is in," Miss Graves said formally. But there was no reproof in her eyes when the wife of the first vice-president asked to see the second. Mrs. Cavendish could call Mr. Bartlett "Frank" if she liked.

Mr. Francis Bartlett came out in, startled, of course all smiles. Mrs. Cavendish clung laughing and small and engaging upon his arm as they went back to his office.

"What kind of member have you been getting yourself into, Betty, while Carl's been away?" Sandra heard him ask, indulgently.

"Oh, I've been awful!" laughed Mrs. Cavendish, just before the door closed.

After that Sandra could not work at all. She presently heard Miss Graves say to the boy "Run in, Mike, and tell Mr. Bartlett that the car is waiting for Mrs. Cavendish . . ."

On the next Sunday, an exquisite

"I forgot my—" he began and stopped."

flashing day of color and blue skies, she walked for an hour in the open residence section of the city. Noon hanging. But at the close sunshiny apartments, the rents were alarming. She and Flora would pay much rent for their cosy flat here as Mrs. Bevlagua used their furniture. Then she began to figure $20 and ran easily into the hundreds.

Sandra went home in the house with a mood of exhaustion and discouragement. That night, despite dinner to bitterness, she discussed suburbanite cottages with her mother.

"I'd die," Flora said simply, looking up over her, soup spoon.

"But, mother here — the world was coming into use of late—it is really terrible, living like this, putting our coffee cups on the edge of the couch and keeping potatoes in the bathroom."

"I'll die anywhere else," Flora protested simply. "I've been right here for fifteen years. All my friends are here. I don't have to make any effort to see them."

"I know."

"And if you got married, Sandra, third'd be the place I wanted to be! You can have all the sun porches and back yards you want; and when Flora with a shudder. "Give me the crowd!"

Sandra laughed and stretched out an affectionate hand. Her lashes were misted; the laughter might as easily have been tears. But Flora neither saw nor suspected that.

Carter Cavendish might never know it, but for his sake her voice was gentler, and the smile in her eyes sweeter.

For his sake Sandra chose her words carefully, grouped her hands, her hair, with painstaking care.

On a damp January afternoon, when the green lamps of the office had been lighted all day long, Carter came back.

Sandra heard his voice at the door that led to the elevator hall; he came through the office with Mr. Bartlett, returning a smiling greeting here and there; then the door of his office closed behind both men.

Sandra had not dared to look up. She worked on busily, blindly, with a fast-beating heart.

At 5 o'clock he reappeared and Sandra heard him say in some one, in his characteristic half-laughing manner, "I've not seen them yet. I've a present for Patsy; could not return without that!"

She looked up; he was looking straight at her. The brown face, the keen dark eyes, the look about his firm, hard mouth; her eyes could drink them in.

He half smiled, as if there were some little secret just between them.

Then he disappeared and Sandra sat on in a daze, not conscious of what was going on about her, her senses washing back and forth like a tide in a sea of vague dreams.

Half an hour later, when she was sure that he had gone home, she carried a sheaf of papers into his office door, then returned to her desk in the new deserted office. It was after 5:30 Mike, the office boy, was emptying the wire wastebaskets; Hutchinson, the janitor, was talking to some peddler or agent, down at the other end of the long room.

She had only to put the papers in a drawer, lock the little centre drawer, where she kept her fountain pen, and other personal treasures and go home. Alone in the car remember that one moment when Carter had looked straight at her with so kindly, so significant an expression of understanding in his dark eyes.

There was a stir at the door; some one coming in.

It was Carter.

He wore a big loose raglan coat with which he was fumbling, and his hat was in his hand the rain had scattered his fresh, hard brown hair, and dark, scalloped hair.

"I forgot my . . ." he began, and stopped.

Sandra had got to her feet; she stood looking at him, under the light, her fingertips braced against the edge of the desk.

Carter came to the other side of the desk and their eyes met together. The end of his sentence was lost in the air; he threw his hat a little, his breath coming short.

"I thought you might be here, alone."

Sandra said nothing; her eyes were fixed steadily on his.

Carter was standing on the other side of the desk; his face was red, he laughed a little as he spoke.

"It just suddenly occurred to me that you might be here, alone."

"The others," she said vaguely, "have gone."

Carter laughed again, foolishly and excitedly.

"Did you miss me?" he asked.

"Yes, Mr. Cavendish," she said. She had to clear her throat to say it, it sounded odd and flat.

Cavendish alone with her in the office, asking her if she had missed him.

TRADE RANGE IS WIDENED

Prices Held Firm But Volume Continued Small

Toronto, March 28—(CP)— The trading range in the Canadian section held firm on the Toronto Stock Exchange today but volume continued small. International Nickel was taken readily in the-short stocks at better prices but turnover elsewhere was small. Walkers, Preferred also eased off today but volume and the price slipped to 19 1-2.

Interesting shares, with exception of Nickel, lagged in sympathy with the New York market. Brazilian held steady at 7 3-4 but C.P.R. was down 3-4. Smelters lost a point to 25 1-2 and Ford of Canada was off 1-2 to 8 1-4. Oils were steady in quiet trading.

Bell Telephone picked up a point to 86. B. C. Power "A" was off a half to 15. In the heavy industries Massey Harris gained a fraction to 3.

GOLD SHARES POINT UPWARD

Siscoe Came Back to Register Gain After Losing 6 Points

Toronto, March 28—(CP)— After a morning sell-off to 1.30 for a loss of 6 points Siscoe came back this afternoon under active buying to show a net gain of 1.37. Durham-Red Lake also rallied this afternoon after selling to 3 cents a share. Other gainers in the spring halo action this afternoon included Hollinger, up 1.50, and Wright Hargreaves were also actively traded.

N. Y. MARKET DRIFTS IDLY

Early Sag Checked But Declines Largely Regained

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP)— The stock market held about to its recent habit of listless drifting today, lacking strength to go further the advance of yesterday's late trading.

Nevertheless, an early sag was soon checked, and declines largely regained. Many issues showed little sympathy with renewed strength in wheat. Cables told of stiff exporter price protection shown in the mid-week subsidies were too small to provide market impetus.

Losses of about 1 to 2 points in Case, Union Pacific and Allied Chemical were largely regained and a drop of about 3 in American Tobacco was cut in half. United States Steel differed after gaining a fraction. The closing was spotty, stocks encountered a little profit taking. Bentley Chronicle dropped several points, in response to its dividend cut.

It begins to look as though the Belleville Victories, or Parnell as they are officially known, will be the class of the O.B.A.A. last fall, will be the class of the league this season. At the meeting of the league clubs held in Toronto last night the club ready to face the 1933 battle for the Bay of Quinte trophy, emblematic of supremacy was represented, at the request of the Picton club, by Frederick Meagher.

At the present moment, the Bay of Quinte League looks to have about as much definite destination as a balloon. Two weeks ago the intermediate boy entered from Belleville in the north to Picton in the south. The North Hastings clubs banded together and withdrew and have formed a little intermediate "Z" group of their own. Now add at the last conference that, that a similar loop is being planned in Prince Edward. The baseball seeds to the south feel that they can form a league of their own and spread it over 40 miles.

Recently we stated, on what we supposed was authentic information, that a baseball conference would be staged at the R. C. I. tonight with the proceeds to go towards financing the O.B.A.A. league. In their quest for the provincial baseball honors. Evidently this statement given us was unfounded as no such gesture has been made. We published the information in good faith and regret any misunderstanding that may have followed. At any rate the girls are going to Toronto on Friday and are more than pleased with the cheque they received from the North End O. D. E. to be applied towards their expenses. . . .

There are two conferences scheduled in the Belleville and District baseball league, when Madoc and Point Anne angle with Frankford and Trenton meeting twice in the evening. The two affiliated clubs will be represented in the group semi-finals after the second game with the Point Anne member of the night battling it out with Mr. Gitlin "Mechanics" on Friday night.

"They came, they saw and they conquered."

On the surface it looked as though the fate of Belleville's hockey team in a little too much for granted last night. It's true that Belleville's sextet they had more scoring opportunities than did George LaBranch's Peterborough bet they failed to capitalize on them and at the old adage goes, goals make a game of hockey games". By the actions of some of the green and white stars yesterday a person would almost imagine, that they merely had to go through the motions, to beat the Tremlandans.

It might be said here and now, that George LaBranch has three different smart packmen and with a two goal lead to their credit should easily annex the Robertson trophy. As a matter of fact this lad Ken Smith does not have a lot to do but look out of the locals. At any rate Thursday night's game was not played entirely by the best hockey game of the season. We'd say—"don't pass this one up."

Yesterday we referred to Red MacDonald as not having scored on Ken Chambers lately. "Well he hasn't yet." We must say, that the crafty "surrell top" irked his best to block a counter, but Chambers proved the better man last night. Red is really "burnt up" now and if vows vengeance, so the fur may fly on Thursday night. In passing on last night say, that the little flare-up in the second period was most unsolicited for.

"SHAMS" EASED OUT OF PLAYOFF

Newmarket Redmen Tired But Game Blank Ottawa 3-0

Ottawa, March 28 (CP)—Newmarket's game young redmen today are Ontario's hope against the champions of Quebec in the eastern finals of the Memorial Cup hockey competition. Demonstrating the same speed and staying power that carried them through thrilling series with Stratford and Sudbury, the York Region team last night completed the elimination of Ottawa Shamrocks by trimming them 3-0 in the second game of the home and away series. They won the first match at Toronto last Saturday by a score of 1-0. Four starters won the round by a four goal margin.

Lacking a trifle aided and weary from a playoff grind, that has taken its toll in energy, the senior city hockey champions never once gave up hope of turning the tables. But a check for the first twenty minutes of "Diamond Jubilee" defence measures, the Newmarket front gilles were unable to locate the shield period to gather goals that all but settled the contest.

COMEDY AND THRILLS IN "CENTRAL PARK" AT THE BELLE

Something different from the average spine-tingling problem picture is "Central Park," the First National photoplay with Joan Blondell and Wallace Ford in the leading roles, coming to the Belle tomorrow, Thursday, for a three-day program.

It is a one location picture with all the action taking place within a single day within the confines of Central Park, one of New York's most beautiful natural spots.

The picture has a depth of heart appeal and a likeness in its personality equal to that of the comedy sold to such pictures as "Union Depot" and "Employees' Entrance," the picture—one that only a man with the ability of Ward Morehouse, famous columnist could have written, and given it the wide appeal it has.

Reveals full of thrills, comedy, suspense, novelty and pathos, and with, as the saying goes "a kick." Hits like a slash-through the warp and woof of the heart. Central Park as it is today, perhaps New York as it is.

Excellent support is loaned Joan Blondell and Wallace Ford in the work of Guy Kibbee, Patricia Ellis and Henry B. Walthall, Charles Richman, Frank Charlton, Claire Dubrey and John Wray.

The Belle's Thursday-Friday-Saturday feature is "From Hell to Heaven," drama of the underworld, concerned with tending the running of a famous racing stable, and the shady characters on the same program. Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie, David Manners and Adrienne Ames are the leading roles in the film.

"From Hell to Heaven" is said to be a story of the type of "Grand Hotel" and "Rasputin and the Empress" in the way it has been written from varied backgrounds and of various circumstances. Yet each story is complete in itself, according to the race.

Much bets on a different horse, hoping for success. The picture opens in the typical climax during the running of the race, when it is determined upon which fortune is to smile.

Jack Pearl Comedy.

"The numerous admirers or Jack Pearl (Baron Munchausen) of radio fame will have the chance to see him in person on the same program as the Belle presents Jack Pearl in "The Meal Ticket"; the popular comedy-drama which will be shown on the same program.

"Vaudeville Comes Tonight."

Nick Coward's "Vaudeville," closes a highly successful four days' engagement at the Belle Theatre tonight.

"Vaudeville" is absolutely unique as screen entertainment, so much so that it has been given a descriptive by title" commentator.

"Vaudeville" is a picture you cannot afford to miss.

Official Film Drama in Social Disease is Here

When "The End of the Road" comes to the Capitol for three days beginning Wednesday, March 29, Belleville will see an official film which can only be shown under the auspices of the Social Hygiene Council.

Part of the Council's campaign against venereal disease, this film has been made in its original form with outstanding success in other cities. The Dominion has this to be the first time it has been exhibited in this city. Approximately 80,000 people saw the picture during its 10-day last-run at Toronto recently, when abnormal police reserves were called out to keep in line the large crowds that thronged admission and stretched for many blocks around a theatre seating 3,000 people.

The aim of the Council's campaign is to educate the masses as to what must be necessary to promote the public health, and to check the tremendous rate of communicable disease and the development of health standards, and to promote such conditions of living, environment and personal conduct as will lead to a healthy family as an institution."

"The End of the Road" showing at the Capitol on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, tells the story of two girls whose upbringing has been along two entirely different grooves. One is reared in luxury, in the story has met with frankness and parental supervision on the part of the mother; in the other, the girl has been reared by parental evasion, influenced by prudery and false modesty. Both systems are disastrous, one to one; disgrace and disease to the other. "The End of the Road" is a story of truth and frankness. It is a picture no parent should miss. Separate showings have been arranged for men and women.

Chicago fell; a temperature drop of 41 degrees in 24 hours, one month's rainfall in one hour.

Most of the propelling and pulling power of the horse lies in its hind quarters.

Trenton "Imperials" Obtain 2-Goal Lead Over "Oilmen" in Finals for Loop Title

Score 4-2, Trenton Being The Best on Night's Play

BEGIN STARS

Lead Looks Like a Big One for "Oilmen" to Overcome

After being down two goals in the first period George LaBrash's Trenton "Imperials" staged a rousing rend (finish) of the local Ontario Senior team by the score of 4 to 2 in the first game of the play-offs at the Belleville Arena last evening by virtue of their win the "Imperials" now enjoy a two goal lead to carry into the second and final game of the series which will be played at the Arena on Thursday night.

Some 500 fans saw the "Imperials" humble the best team in Eastern Ontario Senior ranks in a game which was filled with thrills and speed throughout. After a rather mediocre start, when he was scored upon twice in the first few minutes of play, Ken Chambers, in the net for the "Imperials" settled down to delights to thwart all and sundry efforts of the local forwards and Chambers was busier than Candhi sweating over a hot iron. He played his real net outsides. Les Tice, throughout To Dogs (Dick Begin), always a thorn in the left boards for the "Imperials" was the honors of the night as he was the hero of the evening. Besides scoring one goal and giving a perfect pass for Nohan's counter, Begin outplayed all players on the ice, both defensively, on the ice. Bowen and York teamed well in front of Chambers while Ross Fitch, old Trenton workman on the "Imperials" from the Junior days, was the last into the scoring column the "Imperials" entered the Intermediate ranks by St. Denis and Powers carried the puck down to the Belleville St. Denis, a cast off of the green and white, played his best game of the season and proved to be about the trickiest man on the ice.

Fisherman Shedden Team.

In the absence of Manager Dudley Prudden, Walter Patterson stepped into the managerial reigns of the club and as such he blame of the loss could be laid at his door. The team played well all through. Tice, Sherry and Rigby were far below their par form, while the latter two were harassed constantly by the back checking efforts of the "Imperials" defence. Of the starting line including Cowan, Morgan and Nicoll Mcdonald the "road head" looked the best with Cowan playing hard in spots. Morgan was off colour and turned on his usual speed efforts when called upon. Nicoll looked like a shadow of Nicoll, Welr and McCabe were the best of the rest

Rich Man—Poor Man

by E. J. Hemingway

When Maurice Canard entered his fee lawyer's sumptuously furnished office, in response to an urgent letter from the administrator of his late grandfather's estate, he "walked with the proud step of a man who is worth five million dollars. He expected, and had every right to expect, that of a man worth just the one-fiftieth bit he happened to have on him.

"You'll recall" his lawyer had told him, "that you were bequeathed the sum of one million dollars by your rich cousin, Peter Grozy, was dead. Grozy, it seemed, had been killed on the battlefield in India and buried by his native assistants.

"Unfortunately, we were rather hasty in accepting the evidence, Peter Grozy is alive. Yes, and well. He has been living in England for the past eight years as servant to the only discovered about his grandfather's death. Through his lawyer he has made claim to the entire estate, of course, belongs to him".

Maurice Canard's face fell. Like his little grandson, small, footloose and fancy free. And then he thought with sudden cheer, Sylvia would be delighted to hear of the news. She was always trying to make a go with her little dress shop. Now, a cottage, etc...

Tessie herself had admitted that she had told Maurice frankly that "to the best of her belief she couldn't like him if he were poor."

"I've fought poverty all my life and I'm tired of the battle," she had once said. "I want permanent protection from the awful evil of poverty. The man I marry must give me that. It's more important than love to me."

That classified Tessie. A gold-digger, by her own admission.

Sylvia had flat disliked a caller when Maurice married, had her mind bring him into the library where his was being served. And there he had sat time in speaking his little piece.

"I love everything," he grinned. "To the last cent. I'll have to pawn some of my things to pay my debts, and then hunt up a job."

Sylvia paled. "When did you find out?"

"Thirty an hour ago." He reached for her hand and pressed it. "But don't you worry. We'll get along. We'll have to live a bit simply at the beginning, but I'll make good over night."

She pulled her hand away. "But I can't possibly live simply. I—I—"

"Sylvia!" Maurice's smile vanished. "You mean you don't love me?"

She afraid it must seem a callous...

"But you weren't marrying me for my money, were you?"

"Maurice, dear," said Sylvia coldly, "whether you want to marry me or not, I—"

Maurice rose. Clenching his hands behind him, he said in a hoarse voice, "I'll do—do—anything—to get you. Or—or—anyone—for it. I'll—I'll—take a job. Yes, and I'll be honest about it. I'll tell them that I'm only doing it to get money, and that I'm not interested in the business at all.

RADIO PRIEST ESCAPES POWDER BOMB, ATTEMPT TO INTIMIDATE U. S. ORATOR

Small Bomb, Lowered in Basement, Bursts Under Bedroom of Noted Cleric

Police Comb Royal Oak Village And Detroit For Assailant

NO CLUES FOUND

Native of Hamilton Has Been Prominent in Sunday Broadcasts

Detroit, Mar. 30 (AP)—A small black powder bomb lowered into the basement of the home of the Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin, in Royal Oak, exploded directly under the priest's bedroom at 2 o'clock today, but caused only a small amount of damage. The explosion blew out a window pane and steam pipes in the basement but no one was injured. A quantity of canned goods was also destroyed.

Father Coughlin, a native of Hamilton, Ont., who has become one of the central figures in a heated controversy over Detroit's banking situation, said he was awakened by noise and the sudden shaking of the house. His bedroom was on the first floor of the home, which is situated on Asleep on the second floor were Father John Hurley, 24, assistant, and Father William of the Dun Scotus College Faculty.

Smell of Powder.

Detectives who reached the scene before Father Coughlin had located the underground route of the fuse of a bomb container, but said the small of black powder was so plain they had no doubt that the explosion was caused by a black powder bomb.

The explosion occurred between the 326 of the pastor of the Shrine of the Little Flower and police of Royal Oak made quick on the premises in search of the village, and a heavy guard was placed around the house. Persons living in neighboring houses were questioned but none had seen anyone near the Coughlin home, and so far as the police could determine, none had heard a car leave the street at the time of the explosion.

Outwardly the Coughlin home showed little evidence of the explosion. Yesterday morning there was a long white fabric cord hanging from the frame of a window in the southwest corner of the basement. The bomb, they said, apparently had been tied to the end of the cord and lowered into the basement.

Prominent In Radio.

Father Coughlin who has been delivering weekly addresses on religious, political and economic matters recently has engaged in a sharp controversy with opponents of the government's plan under which a new National Reserve Bank would here while two old banks were placed in charge of conservators for liquidation. He has warmly criticized Detroit banking interests which fought the new bank plan and has himself been criticized in turn.

Father Charles E. Coughlin was born in Hamilton, Ont., 41 years ago, and spent a few years in Toronto, Ontario. He attended St. Mary's Separate School and St. Michael's College in Toronto. He became known as an excellent speaker at St. Basil's Church, Toronto, and was ordained at St. Basil's Church on June 3, 1916.

Leader In Drama.

He went from Toronto to Assumption College, Sandwich, Ont., where he introduced the Catholic Dramatic Movement. He became known for his study and vivid readings of Shakespeare's plays. He was later welcomed throughout Western Ontario and Michigan. Soon, too, he a forte of Father Coughlin, both in their work and in their speech, he was pronounced "very clever" by Prof. B. Ralfagn who gave him his final training in elocution at Hamilton.

Father Coughlin claims he was always a United States subject. "My father was born in Indiana, and never changed his nationality," he said.

ARCHIBALD HANLEY DIES AT AGE 87

Kingston, Ont., March 30 (CP) — Archibald Hanley, 87, well-known resident of Kingston, died today. He was born here 87 years ago and from here all his life. He was formerly inland revenue officer and was a close friend of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. Mr Hanley is survived by one son, Very Rev. Canon A. J. Hanley, of Brockville and two daughters, Miss Stella Hanley and Miss Minnie Hanley.

FUNNIES IN THE NEWS

Nanoose, Que., March 30 (AP) — A 1,200 pound sea lion swam on to the beach here recently and was put under guard. Captivity. After a few days the animal escaped from which several thousand tourists came to see him, he was cleared to make his way seaward. He swam out a short distance, paused and then, resolutely making up his mind, turned and came back to the beach. Interested visitors are still passing him the circus.

Brunswick, Canada, March 30 (AP)—Premier James Finlay was badly scratched and bitten by a feral tom cat in his office today. Hubbard rallied against future persons of this kind by private power. The effort will not apply, however, to cats who manage to have dress or police duty.

WHEELS HUM AT DAGENHAM

Ford Plant Proceeds With Operations After Wage Dispute Halt

Dagenham, England, March 30 (AP)—Hands of the Ford Motor plant were humming merrily today after a three day halt owing to a wage dispute which was settled yesterday.

A skeleton staff had assembled to prepare for this morning's work and then were smiling faces as workers of each shift trooped into the plant to take up their duties. A total of 7,000 were affected.

CHEMICAL EXPLOSION RECALLS WAR RAIDS

Walls Blown Down, Floors Collapse in London Suburb

Mitcham, England, March 30 (AP) — Scenes reminiscent of a war-time air raid occurred in the quiet London suburb today following a series of explosions in a chemical works by which one person was killed and 30 injured, several seriously.

Most of the damage and casualties occurred in nearby streets, where walls of houses were blown down, floors were blown out, floors collapsed and inhabitants were thrown into panic-stricken screaming. Many were cut by flying glass.

Fight First, Then Salute, General Hagood Advises, Mocking Old Ideas

Minneapolis, March 30 (AP)— Abolishment of "old ideas" by military men and establishment of a "new standard" for national defense were advocated here by General Johnson Hagood of Fort Omaha, commandant of the United States Seventh Corps Area.

His demand that recruits be taught to fight before being shown how to salute, he made last night before a dinner of reserve officers.

He followed it with the prediction that if military men do not effect a reorganization, it will be done by "somebody from the outside absolutely unfamiliar with the problem of national defense."

"We have come to the point," he said, "where we should quit the silly ideas that Company B or Company A can beat the United States because of its neat arrangement of its cups and forks and spoons."

OSTENTATIOUS DISPLAY GUNS GIVEN DENIAL

Provincial Police Defended Against Charge at Ottawa

GROUP NECESSARY

Provincial Men Do Not Draw Weapons Without Cause

TORONTO, March 30.—(CP)—"I can't credit the statement as being by Mr. Malcolm. Surely there is some mistake," declared Colonel V.A.S. Williams, Commissioner of Ontario Provincial Police, today in commenting on statements attributed to Hon. James Malcolm, former Minister of Trade and Commerce in the Bennett cabinet.

Mr. Malcolm charged the Ontario Provincial Police with an "ostentatious display" of their firearms and guns, the Liberal leader said more that the present arming of the police was the use of force. He held there were no criminals in the rural districts and police were never required to do work that necessitated the use of guns.

"Our men are not armed with two guns," said Colonel Williams. They are armed with one revolver, carried in a completely covered holster, and they are trained for self-protection. Even while Mr. Malcolm was Minister of Trade, the provincial police held up a bank at Hanover and the bandits wounded the manager.

Men Are Trained

"Every quarter our men are fully instructed in the use of pistol in addition to they are given lectures regularly. They do not, under any circumstances, draw a weapon until it is absolutely necessary for the protection of their own lives.

"They must be prepared to arrest burglars, bank bandits, murderers, and other criminals. These criminals are desperate, and it would be unfair to send a policeman after a desperate law-breaker unless he were given a chance to protect himself.

"Some years ago, a gang of thugs in Ontario took an unarmed policeman for a ride". was criticized at that time because the police were not armed, and so I ordered them to carry guns. But they carry one gun, not two, and they do not have it displayed ostentatiously, but carried in a covered holster."

Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney-General, intimated he would issue a statement later.

Canada and United States Study Reciprocal Trade

New York, March 30 (AP)— The New York Journal of Commerce says today that technicians of the Roosevelt administration are making a study of Canadian-United States trade matters with a view to laying the groundwork for conversations between the Canadian Minister at Washington, Hon. W. D. Herridge, and Cordell Hull, America's Secretary of State.

The paper recalls the meeting between President Franklin Roosevelt and Mr. Herridge at New York a few weeks ago, and says the two nations then served to "sound out" the Canadian government on the subject of mutual trade concessions.

"Apparently if the Dominion government was quite receptive to the proposition," that America's Secretary of State says, "and it is understood Canadian experts are making a similar technical study of the matter in Ottawa

MYSTERY MISS NOW ON JOB

Simple Rules to Follow in Order to Obtain Crisp Dollar Bill

Somewhere along Front street and adjoining streets, in and out of the downtown stores, wanders a blue-eyed, young lady with dark hair, weighing somewhere in the neighborhood of 125 pounds, and standing about five feet five inches in her high heeled shoes.

And, as she weaves in and through the crowds who throng the walks and invade the various stores, numbers of young men, old men, young ladies and ladies not so young, follow her in the hopes of attracting some of the crisp new one dollar bills which she is handing out with the liberality of a spendthrift.

It's all so simple. All one has to do to get one of these new one dollar bills is by simply walking up to the young lady when one meets her in one of the stores, and say: "You are Miss Betsy Times" and produce the coupon for a purchase made in that store. Immediately she will hand over the dollar and all quietly away.

And the mysterious young lady? Is she a Belleville girl, or is she some girl from out of town, who was in just helping things along? Not at all. Mr. Joseph Delahey, chairman of the Board of Directors, is dumped himself. "I haven't even seen her" he confessed when interviewed. "I wouldn't know her if she walked into the store right now."

Mr. Russ Wilson, also on the committee, disclaimed all knowledge of the mysterious lady.

"Wouldn't know her if I saw her. She's out on the streets some place, but who she is I haven't the faintest idea." Mr. Cook of John W. Cook's store, also on the committee, hasn't seen the young lady today at all", he declared. "She must be out on the city street right now, though, giving away dollar bills. We'll have more little stories for you later on. A little early yet. She just started this morning, you know."

So that was that. And in the meantime the young lady moves in and the stores wherever they go, bluegrass girls, Belleville girls, shopping in the neighborhood or 126 pounds and standing about five foot five, are finding a pretty tough for the next three days.

TOLL GATE WILL RACE IN AUGUST

Toll-Gate, Kingston's crack race horse and one of the greatest of the Grand Circuit, will be seen in action in Trenton on August 10th, as a result of an acceptance of a challenge issued by the horse's owner, J. M. Hoddy, Cobourg, to meet, with Marjorie M. of Nova Scotia. Marjorie M. has a record of 2.03¼, and has been somewhat of a sensation in the Maritime Provinces. Followers are keenly interested in the coming match.

SUDDEN LEAK IN WATER MAIN

Following an emergency call which was received on Thursday afternoon of the city water works department were at work on the leak Friday morning attempting to locate a sudden leak in the six inch water main which passes on Front street. Two days, it is believed, the leak which had developed in the main had been steadily eating away a subterranean cavity under the driveway leading to the school, and creating a dangerous condition in the road. Only a thin shell of earth supported the road at that point. Fortunately the condition was observed by one of the pupils of the college who promptly informed the authorities. By the time the ground ten feet square was found by employees of the department.

WORK OF SWEEPER IS HAMPERED

Spring is here and with it comes the cleaning of the streets but this is almost an impossibility if cars are continually left on the curb parts. along the curbs, the work is mitigated again. The police are making a roundup and checking of the cars parked on Front Street over night and there is a possibility the owners will be called in the police station for an explanation. Early-to-bed regarding traffic specifically prohibits the parking of cars on Front Street over night.

FINE SPECIMEN OF PIKE CAUGHT

Hanging in the meat shop of Clark and Miles, Front street, is fine specimen of the pike family. The fish weighs 17 pounds and was landed in the Moira river at Lime Ridge. It is most wonderful for fishermen to find in their nets a pike of this size.

FRICTION SETS A WHEEL ON FIRE

Dragging brakes, whose friction heated the hub, that in turn heated the brake drums of the car red hot, and ignited the wooden spokes of the left rear wheel, brought grief to a Madoc owned car at the intersection of Front and Dundas streets today, when the burning spokes crumpled, and dropped the car to the pavement. The owner of the machine parked it on the side of the road, while a new wheel was being procured. Little damage was done.

FROST NOW COMING OUT OF THE ROADS

It is reported that that portion of the county road in the third concession of Sidney between Allen's Corners and Tucker's Woods is only passable by horse and rig. It would seem advisable for car users for some days to ascertain the condition of the county and township roads before attempting to make trips over them during the spring break-up.

THERMOMETERS DO SPRING DANCE

"Going like sixty" was applicable in the manner of the rapid rise of the mercury in local thermometers on Thursday. By noon official temperatures indicated that 60 above had been passed, and that the mark would probably be reached in the heat of the afternoon. A brighter sun shone from clear skies throughout the day while winds which blew cooler on Wednesday turned into spring zephyrs on Thursday, 14th ice remains in either the river or the bay, or on the city streets.

HUNT FOR HONEST MAN IS RELATED

Peterboro, March 30—Honest men are scarce in this district, according to Attorney Ross Hall, who, while declaring in police court that he spent $900 in gasoline and oil during the past two months trying to find an honest man to invest money in his mining syndicate.

It might be said, however, that the money Stone claimed to have expended in this way was the major portion of that invested in his syndicate by a half dozen local investors. Stone was charged along with Albert T. Fisher, of Toronto, under the Ontario Securities Act, with selling stock without being registered. Fisher pleaded guilty to two fines of $40 and $2.25 costs or one month in jail each. Fisher's case was adjourned for a week.

VOCATIONS IN LIFE THEME

Rev. Father Augustine Speaks to Women at St. Michael's

Vocations in life was the theme of the inspiring sermon delivered by Rev. Father Augustine, O.F.M. Union City, N.J. at last evening's solemn benediction service conducted at St. Michael's Church. The congregation filled the church to capacity. The sermon was preceded by the reception of the Rosary and instruction on the Sacrament of Penance by Rev. Father Clarence, C.P.

In his sermon, Rev. Father Augustine discussed religious vocations and the married life. Those who chose the former consecrated themselves to God's service desiring to live their lives in accordance with Him. It was a life of sacrifice but was one of happiness. In the world they took the tiesten bound themselves to a life of poverty, chastity and obedience. Those who felt they had a religious vocation should pray fervently for guidance and heed the advice of their confessor. They should study the opportunities for whose particular work such as teaching, nursing, caring for the poor and afflicted, or devoting themselves to prayer, they could best be suited. Parents were urged to bring up children in the path of girls who had a religious vocation.

For those whose vocation is life as a married lady, Rev. Father Augustine had words of counsel and advice. He declared that in many unhappy marriages was that due to the couple parties not considered the supernatural character of matrimony. In such cases, not only unhappiness was inevitable.

The preacher also stressed the factors that make for happy marriages. Matrimony as a solemn Sacrament, should be entered into lightly without preparation and prayer. Marriage should be solemnized by all the religious ceremony prescribed by the Church in which the bride should begin with God's blessing. Augustine Nuptial Mass, during the sitting of the church regarding mixed marriages.

The evening service were closed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament...

CAPACITY CROWD FOR HEALTH FILM

Film Shown as Part of Campaign by Hygiene Council

Under the auspices of the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, the film "The Road to Health" was shown at the Capitol Theatre yesterday. The audience was confined to women and children. Many mothers were present at the performance. The film was part of the Council's campaign against venereal disease. Dr. Ross Hall, M.P.P., spoke briefly on the facts for truth and frankness on the part of parents. He said that the two girls whose outlooks on life are widely different due to parental frankness and lack of it, are typical cases and the false ideals of the mother in the other.

The influence of the mother's teachings on her daughter's conduct of life leads the one to happiness and success, the other to disease and disgrace. The picture shows in a graphic manner the elements of carelessness and ignorance.

Address With Pictures

After the showing of the film Mr. J. A. Cantlie of the Canadian Social Hygiene Council introduced Dr. F. S. Rishop who gave an address on the subject shown. Dr. Bishop said the campaign to check this simple disease was sponsored by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council whose headquarters are in Toronto. Active steps have been taken to combat the disease and clinics have been established in various centres, the nearest being in Kingston. The idea in showing the picture is to arouse public opinion so that there will be co-operation in the promotion of public health and the elimination of such dread disease.

Hospital films were shown after the address. Dr. E. Connor was the speaker at the showing last night. Today the film is being shown for men exclusively.

ALLEGE MAN HAD FIREARM

Court Case is Sequel to Incident of Some Time Ago

D. A. "Allie" Kerr of this city was arrested on Wednesday afternoon at his home on the Belleville General Hospital on a charge of carrying a firearm. Kerr, who has been a patient at the institution for the past month suffering from three badly fractured ribs, was later brought before Magistrate Mikel by the Provincial Police and remanded in custody. The accused was charged with pointing a revolver at Mrs. R. J. Mason.

Kerr's arrest following an alleged brawl, which occurred on the night of March 1st last, when Kerr fell down a stairway containing three broken ribs, an air of mystery still surrounds Kerr's fall, while it is also alleged, that he pointed the firearm in the general direction of Mrs. Mason. Later on the night the fatal bullet had been found embedded in the timbers of the house at the foot of the stairway.

The coldest place in the world is probably up on Mount Logan in the Antarctic continent, is the theory of one meteorologist.

TRANSIENTS "RIDING RODS" TO BE LIMITED

Most Likely Order of Last Year Will Be In Force.

Although it is expected that both Canadian railways will again wage "war" on hobos, it is stated this summer nothing official relative to the present great depression has been issued by the R.C.M.P. in connection with the C.N.R. police in advertising the practice of "hoboing" on the railway freight and passenger trains. Thousands of transients "beating the way" were ejected from the various trains in Ontario as designated points while other more drastic measures were taken when prosecutions were forthcoming in some cases.

Although nothing official regarding the continuation of this practice for 1933 has been received at the local railway depots it is expected that an order ratifying such procedings will be received in the near future. In the meantime the number of transients passing eastward on trains in this immediate district is decreasing as the weather grows milder.

ROAD IS POOR TO BANCROFT

Mayor Tice Takes 9 1-2 Hours to Make The Journey

Mayor George O. Tice was Tuesday and Wednesday in connection with his business as insurance adjuster; the month bound trip was made early in the day, Tuesday, returning it was a different story. The road was in such a condition during the day and it took Mr. Tice this and a half hours to make the journey from Bancroft to Madoc, and a pretty penny to be hauled out of holes, to say nothing of axiety as to whether or not he would be able to get his car over the "rough way to the north" that day or night. Eventually the trip was accomplished and from Madoc to Belleville the pleasurable going after traversing the Bancroft road made the return trip.

PICKEREL, PIKE ARE PROTECTED

Regulations Respecting Angling and Spearing Given in Full

Some changes have been made in the game and fish laws of Ontario, according to a speaker and chairman of the sub-committee of the whole fish and game committee.

Section 2 of the game and fishery department act was amended by adding a new subsection to the effect that no person shall fish with any yellow pickerel fly, minnow or pikie from the 15th day of April to the 15th day of May, both days inclusive.

The most important law to be enforced in this connection, it was stated, regarding the opening of all areas, excepting the Northumberland and Durham, and the Prince Edward county districts, may be summed up as follows: "No angler shall have in his possession more than 25 pickerel, pike or maskinonge in any one day." In the counties mentioned, between the months of April and May, there is a close season on pickerel, pike or pikie from sunset on Saturday to sunrise on Monday of each week.

Another amendment changed the fish closed season in the counties of Victoria, Peterborough, Northumberland and Durham, and the whole of Prince Edward county, so that no person may at any time during the months of April and May, inclusive of each year, have in his possession any fish caught in these counties.

Section 6 of the act was amended to read as follows: "An angler shall not have in his possession at one time more than 25 speckled trout, rainbow trout (otherwise known as steelhead trout) or lake trout, by means of a rod, line and hook, or more than 25 brook trout, or more than 25 bass, or more than 25 maskinonge, or more than 25 pickerel, pike or pikie, or more than 25 whitefish, or more than 25 ciscoes, or more than 25 herring, or more than 25 suckers, or more than 25 sturgeon, or more than 25 muskellunge, or more than 25 of any other species of fish, or more than 25 fish of all species taken together, or more than one day's catch of the fish mentioned in this section, whichever is the smaller number."

Section 7 of the act was amended by striking out the words "or pikie" in the first line thereof.

Section 8 of the act was amended by striking out the words "or pikie" in the first line thereof.

LIBRARY SURVEY IN CANADA

Four-fifths of Canada's population of ten and a half million people are utterly without library service of any kind. Only three of the nine provincial governments as yet give more than a pious theoretical approval to the principle that the library is an integral part of a people's welfare and education. The cause of this condition is that the desire for reading facilities (outside of Ontario and British Columbia) has not expressed itself as a public expectation or demand.

These comments are taken from the publication:

"Libraries in Canada, a Study of Library Conditions and Needs," which has just been issued by the Ryerson Press, Toronto, and the American Library Association, Chicago.

The survey was conducted by John Ridington, librarian, University of British Columbia, B.C.; Miss Mary J. L. Black, librarian, public library, Fort William, Ontario, and Dr. George H. Locke, chief librarian, public library, Toronto, on funds supplied by the Carnegie Corporation.

The recommendations include:

(1) The creation of larger administration library units based on the county or a co-operative combination of urban and rural municipalities into a regional library district.

(2) Extension of library service, by branch libraries, library trucks, etc., until it is as nearly universal as the postal system.

(3) Competent professional supervision of library service as a direct responsibility of provincial governments.

The problem of satisfying the hunger for books of those who live on farms or in isolated communities is marked. The thousands of discarded books eagerly sought by the prairie farmers are in part a subsequent testimony to the truth of this while the letters received from rural and far-off districts, pleading for books, bring favorable results. "In a land of wide distances, which these people are laboring," the report states.

"Only citizens of Ontario are entirely without library service, according to the statement of Mr. W. O. Carson, late Inspector of Libraries. Today those are gratified to know strongly assert that this is but one-half the actual number of those suffering from this deprivation. It is not within the bounds of reason and in the interests of social protection, that if a man wishes to read a book he should be able to get it no matter what part of the country he may live. Should he live in a town or city, he can get a book in the local public library—should he be unemployed and penalized for not living in an urban centre?

"Resting on the province at large there is the responsibility for giving library rural districts, and there ought to be some method devised whereby any people who desire to read may have that desire fulfilled."

The commission sees real dangers in the multiplication of small libraries, many of which are used by very few out of the people because they feel that these libraries can buy very few books and that the important books are those which they buy. The result is that the stock in these libraries is so nearly alike so very ordinary and so very limited in amount that the library really fails almost entirely in its mission. There is little money for books after expenses are paid, rarely is a book of distinction found in this type of library it corresponds to a cheap store system.

One these facts the commission of enquiry has based its recommendation that counties or districts to centralize book selection and distribute efforts in such a way that all the districts may have the benefit advantage of all the books in that county or district. Proof that this is possible is shown in England and Scotland where great transformation has taken place in seven years.

The county library is foreseen by F. C. Jenkins, Inspector of Public Libraries in Ontario.

In the present-day world of severe competition we realize there is felt the dire need for more intelligence. General education is literally in the air. "Soon the ignorant and the unintelligent will be, both socially and politically, as already they are economically, among the casual class," the report says.

A few lectures in every high school are recommended on the use of books and libraries. These should be supplemented by a formal year's course in class in the local library for a practical demonstration. Generally school libraries are altogether inadequate and in many hundreds of Ontario schools libraries are entirely non-existent. The remedy is to develop greater co-operation between the school and the public library.

Summarizing the results of the survey in Ontario the Commission has the conviction that the outstanding library problem is that of the small library and the remedy is co-operation—the pooling of resources, in funds, in books, and in personnel of these little libraries with a unified regional library system soundly financed, ably and competently staffed, and efficiently administered.

Speaking of federal problems the commission asks: "If the project of a National Library for Canada, a fantastic and unrealizable dream?"

The problem in libraries in Canada is due to the fact that there are five regional Canadas with differing backgrounds, conditions and outlooks. Hence there are five differing sets of library problems confronting Canada; those of the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the three Prairie Provinces (Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta), and British Columbia.

Galt, Belleville, Oshawa, and Chatham, among the smaller cities, all have excellent libraries the report states.

IF THEY FORGET TO SEE

"Blind these dull eyes, if they forget to see
The beauty of each dew-enchanted day,
Rising new-born from night's dark mystery,
To march in splendor with the sun's bright ray.

Earth holds her royal court of seasons there—
White-blossomed Spring, fair Summer garlanded,
Ripe, glowing Autumn with her wind-blown hair—
And Winter, fir and holly garmented.

"Blind these dull eyes the day they do not know
That earth holds youth and age forever dear—
The character that kindly years bestow—
In fine as any April cavalier.

"Blind these dull eyes, if they forget to see Beauty in life—far better to be blind!"

COLORADO HAS AN OFFICIAL LIAR. Phil McCarty, of Denver, designated champion liar of the United States a few weeks ago. Governor Ed. C. Johnson appointed McCarty official liar of Colorado at a salary of one dollar per year. The Governor said he would pay the salary out of his own pocket in case there is no money left in the treasury after the Legislature gets through with its economy program. McCarty said he would not accept the appointment. "What's the use unless the money worse than I do," said McCarty, "so I can't accept it. I am highly honored to receive the position, but you see I am a State official something tells me I'll have to do so much lying I'll get pretty sick of it." McCarty is a former member of the Colorado Legislature. He designated champion liar by the Burlington, Wisconsin, Liars' Club. He was selected in a twenty-five contest.

BROCKVILLE HAS A HOCKEY TEAM called the Magedomas that is playing the game courageously and skillfully into the finals, only to be defeated finally by an Ottawa team. Brockville also has a box lacrosse team and a baseball team which can play with the best of them. Considerable of the success of athletics in Brockville may be ascribed to Major Taylor Fulford, father and successor to the late Senator George Taylor Fulford, a pioneer in the proprietary medicine industry in the Province. Taylor Fulford thinks so much of the Magedomas that he flew from Miami to New York City, then came on by rail to Brockville, in order to be at the ringside in Kemptville when the Brockville team was playing a wrestling game. Incidentally it may be mentioned as rather a coincidence that while George Taylor Fulford is carrying on in the footsteps of his father, his dear neighbor in the King St. east residential section is William Henry Comstock, son of the late William Henry Comstock, one of the earliest pioneers in the proprietary medicine industry in the United States and Canada. W. H. Comstock, like his friend, G. T. Fulford, likes to get behind projects for the benefit of Brockville, but while G. T. Fulford favors lacrosse, W. H. Comstock favors water sports, and is also deeply interested in Rotary activities. W. H. Comstock for several years was the genii of the lantern which produced a Christmas tree on Court House Square in Brockville with brass band playing, and presents enough for an army of children. Two good citizens and worthy sons of worthy sires.

—Hardly had the lecturer began his talk than he noticed his audience were paying very little attention.

When, however, some of them began to yawn he became a little nettled.

"I'm afraid friends," he said rather coldly, "that I am detaining you, so—"

A voice from the back of the hall called out:

"No, go on, guy'nor. It's still raining."

KNOWING HOW TO OVERCOME NERVOUSNESS

Patients With Obsessions, Morbid Ideas, Easily Give up Hope

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Psychology

Nervousness is on the increase. Yet few persons know how to prevent it, while a comparatively large number of nervous sufferers fail to overcome the malady.

The trouble really is that many persons believe that they are born nervous, or that nothing can be done about it. Often, too, they suffer one physician after another without giving any one of them sufficient time to help them much relief. Lastly, the specialists in nervous disorders is not usually consulted, letting the one who has made a life's study of the manifold disorders that may befall the nervous people and the man who, one subject excepted, would know just how to help him.

The trouble is that many persons believe that they are born nervous, or that nothing can be done about it. Often, too, they suffer one physician after another without giving any one of them sufficient time to help them much relief. Lastly, the specialists in nervous disorders is not usually consulted, letting the one who has made a life's study of the manifold disorders that may befall the nervous people and the man who, one subject excepted, would know just how to help him.

Nervousness is not to be sure, nervousness is a malady. Everybody is likely to become nervous at some time or other; but, as a rule, the nervousness and strain to reveal a certain amount of nervousness. Ordinarily such nervousness disappears when the cause is removed.

Worry about a job or one's life, or work under pressure, or too much exercise may be the cause of many of these factors, as well as many others, may produce nervousness but what one might call an acute case of nervousness.

It is the patients with fears, obsessions, compulsions, anxiety, morbid ideas, who are sometimes the life who are likely, however, to give up hope. Such persons one may group under the general title of neurosis. Self-consciousness is the keynote of a neurosis is, above all else, an individual matter. Not only must the physical side of the individual be built up but, in addition, grand therapy and specialized psychological procedures, such as psychoanalysis, are usually indicated.

Nervousness, whatever its variety, these days suddenly jumps on nerve shocks, frights, unusual worry — these and other things on nerve energy—may precipitate a breakdown. That is, many persons might be called "the straw that breaks the camel's back." Yet in practically every case, if it be thoroughly studied, one discovers faulty character traits that often date back to near childhood.

Children, therefore, should be watched for signs of nervousness. Punishing their attendees should be directed toward preventing and threatening, discrimination to play, a child's natural attitude, to normal and peculiar thinking and behavior.

Adults as well as children require healthy interests which take them outside themselves, so to speak, and give them pleasure. To be shy and timid is no good at any age. We need to mix with others, to have fun with our environment, if we are to think clearly and allow our emotions to be turned outwards.

Diet, of course, however, should ever be considered hopeless except through understanding and study of the individual case, though many results even when least expected.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Health Hint

Diet for the nursing mother should be somewhat restricted but not much—of her regular eating habits. Care must be taken, however, that the food be readily digested, and that certain out-of-season articles be included in the diet. The intake every twenty-four hours should be increased by about two pints, preferably milk. Plenty of rest and constipation is not to be encouraged.

Little Benny's Note Book

Saturday morning I ate my oatmeal and ran out to the street feeling good. Then I saw Sid and he was running out of his house, and we both yelled, Hooray Saturday, Hooray, Saturday.

And we started to jump around to prove how lively we felt, the saying, G. I. Joe, grab, I could work like a wyle in the park and play ball and still feel as fresh as ever.

Then I went back in the house and then what I do. I could start kicking to football the cat and then I sat still supper time without stopping for lunch, and even then I wouldn't be tired, Sid said. Let's pretend we're the horses and run around the block and then we'll be tired, which even getting out of breth, he said. Then I said, Sid, I'll tell you what let's hop up to the corner and back which is a mile, and Sid said, I'll do one of us loses their belleris, even if we do takes a long time, and Sid said, G, all rite, or no, I got another idear.

Which just then ma looked out of our front door, saying, Benny, I want you to run down to the grocer store for me, I wans a half a pound butter.

Aw G, ma, do you mean rite away, saying, I am busy now, and ma mark, I said, and ma said, I'll settle it for you I said now get started for those lemmons, and if you're back in 6 minnits by the clock you'll regret it.

You mean, I said. And I said to Sid, Come on, Sid, I'll race you, and he said, Aw G, I'll wait for you.

Aw come on, you sissy I said and I started to run and Sid run and he said, Maybe I amn, but it's not my fault.

The result being I went by myself, having a good mind to run all the way home, but I didn't. Ma wouldn't even notice.

EARLY CITY HISTORY TOLD

Sugar, Tea, Salt, And Whiskey Prices Paid by Pioneers

Magistrate W. C. Mikel, K.C., in compiling a history of Belleville, has assembled some information concerning prices paid by and to the early pioneers of this province. It is interesting to note what they considered that there was very little profit in the circulation at that time.

The late Gerald E. Hart, who conducted a general store at Belleville, Ontario, for many years, found continuing in business for about forty years a difficult task. Mr. Woodcock's man and preserved his accounts and papers with great care. These papers have fallen into the hands of Lennox and Addington Historical Museum, and W. Harrington, K.C., has published extracts from these interesting records.

In these records we find in 1798 that gold ten to Stephen Gilbert at six shillings (about $1.50). In 1795 the following entries in connection with a purchase by John Fairman at two shillings per pound (50c): Loaf sugar can today be purchased at 6 cents.

Caleb Wise was sold to John Derman at two shillings (about $1.25) a yard. There was also a sale of half a yard of fine cambric muslin at one shilling, and three pence. A much better quality can now be purchased at half the price. When the extreme scarcity of money in the early days of the West is considered these prices of commodities are high. Wages are stated above as compared with present conditions.

The rate of wages per day in those pioneer times was fifty cents. If there were overtime, it was three shore prices for tea, sugar and salt now it would be considered a hardship, notwithstanding the fact that wages now are from four to ten times higher. The labour in which the early pioneers were principally employed was cutting down the native forest trees, clearing up the land and erecting log houses. Time was extremely hard work, and their hours were from daylight to dark. They had own compensation, however, cheap land. We find an entry in 1806 of a sale of whiskey to Jacob Vanslyck at five shillings per (about $1.25).

The more we consider the benefits conferred on this country by the early pioneers the greater our admiration we must have for them.

"Talking of floods," remarked Mr. Alex. Henderson, Q.C., County Crown Attorney, to a Reporter today, "I remember in the year of 1844 a flood in the old barn carried away when I lived on the west side of Front Street, nearly opposite the Commercial Hotel. There was a gaboldy horse. The horse managed to break loose from its halter and get ashore there where Wm. Carter's boat-house now stands and which by those days was considered the residential part of the town. During that year the ice was piled up in a large mass, creating widespread destruction along the river front. Belleville has undergone some changes since those days," continued Mr. Henderson, "I can remember Captain Reynolds, who was the sheriff of Ontario, driving down from a cow where Dr. Sprague's house now stands, on the corner of George and Bridge Streets, and it was a treacherous spot filled with quicksand. I remember when a boy being called upon to pull a boy out of the sand in which he was gradually sinking being powerless to help himself. My recollection to my father got stuck in the same spot, and from a few feet had to be shot. The boy was dragged from between the corner of Dundas and Front Street and the wharf. In 1832 my father built a quantity of lumber ready to build a house and the author-like look remarkable. It was also built a hospital for cholera patients. The cholera scare created a panic in those days, and a guard was placed in position on the wharf to prevent vessels from landing. Men were stationed on the Kingston and Trenton roads to prevent people from coming into the village."

Mr. Green has spent fifteen years in Japan as an Alliance Missionary and gave an interesting description of the conditions there.

Tonight the Rev. J. Macmillan will speak on "Days of the Philippine Islands." Mr. Macmillan is a returned missionary from China and the Philippines, spending many years there and has had a varied experience in those countries. Mrs. Macmillan is buried in the Philippine Islands.

On Friday night Rev. C. F. Green will give a second lantern lecture on Japan and on Sunday, the speakers will give missionary messages both morning and evening.

Rev. J. S. McMullen is Invited to Remain for Another Year

Dundas Street Church Pays Pastor Fine Tribute

At a largely attended Official Board meeting held last evening in Dundas Street United Church, the following resolution moved by Mr. K. H. Bird and seconded by S. J. Ketcheson was unanimously carried:

"That we hereby place upon record our very high appreciation of the life and labours of our beloved pastor, the Rev. J. S. McMullen, as manifested amongst us since his sudden change of Dundas Street Mission on July 1st, 1932.

We cannot speak too highly of his loving, gospel message on each Sabbath to Sabbath—his visitation of sick beds, and from home to home bringing prayer, worship and consolation into the humble abodes of our mission folk.

We would also be mindful at this time of Mr. McMullin's generous sharing of his love, sympathy, and temporal comforts with the distressed and needy people of his beloved flock; also his earnest, heartfelt, solicitude in evangelistic efforts for the souls of men and the changed lives of the people committed to his charge.

We are also reminded of our pastor's wise conduct of the temporal affairs of the mission as seen in the introduction of the envelope system, the prime financial reports, re-roofing and cleaning of our three churches and their reopening free of debt.

Therefore we the representatives of the three churches assembled, tendering our sharing of his love, sympathy, and temporal comforts with the distressed and needy people of his beloved flock; also his earnest, heartfelt, solicitude in evangelistic efforts for the souls of men and the changed lives of the people committed to his charge.

We are also reminded of our pastor's wise conduct of the temporal affairs of the mission as seen in the introduction of the envelope system, the prime financial reports, re-roofing and cleaning of our three churches and their reopening free of debt.

Therefore we the representatives of the three churches assembled, tendering our sincere appreciation to Mr. McMullen, also to wish him every success and prosperity in the future."

OLD-FASHIONED MENUS NOW AT WHITE HOUSE

Back to the Days of Plain and Simple Food

WASHINGTON, March 30.—(CP)—Herb-flavored, home-prepared, historic dishes of Andrew Jackson's grandmother knew—have been brought to the White House table by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Their trend—to quote the culinary researcher, the Rachel Donelson Jackson is "away from the food flub-dubs foisted upon us, and back to the days, when the onion and the herb were as important as the canopener."

Mrs. Roosevelt told of having already served the soups of Jackson pedigree, Gumbo Creole and Crab Meat Bonne.

To aid those interested in obtaining the iron from their cooking pots she has been serving low cost menus prepared by Cornell University. She believes such menus are an effective weapon in combatting malnutrition among children.

Discovery of a simple numerical relationship which points rather strongly to the idea of a mechanical relationship of the universe is possible.

FALL IN LOVE.. BE BEAUTIFUL

THE BEAUTY BOX

(By Helen Follett)

Women who are in love are blessed with a radiance that is akin to beauty. Sarah Bernhardt confessed in her old age that her most youthful because she was always in love. It's a wonderful formula. All the pleasant emotions help keep the face in form. All the most ones wreck it. Jealousy, stark confusion, envy are the enemies of good looks. Not alone because they invite unpleasing expressions, but because they have a depressing effect upon the physical mechanism. They chill the skin, interfere with digestion, disturb sleep, and so forrow the countenance that in course of time it will look like an old vellum. Then confession ought to scare the surly ones and the fretters.

If you would something nice to play with, get an eyelash curler. It doesn't have to be heated. Give the lagging upward brush. Say for a few hours. Looks like a miniature curling iron.

Nervousness, fatigue, depression call for a balance of gentle outdoor exercise and complete relaxation. Get out and tramp. Come in dress, then take a warm bath. Lie down. In a flop, imagine that you're floating. It is possible to make the mind blank by gradually closing thoughts. Pretend a dark forest. Imagine your self a log. Keep saying the words, heavy. Nerves will make their knots the tired body will find refreshment.

The laced cord is the ideal shoe for the housewife who travels the domestic beat all day, because, as it spreads from vamp, it can be laced more snugly. The foot needs support. Women who wear pumps and house slippers are the ones who limp around on painful little dogs, get callioned heels, and the next thing. When shoes are out of shape, offer no support, and are of course down at the heel, the feet and ankles are over. Twinging toes make twinging tempers.

Finger nails break easily when the hands come in daily contact with harsh cleaners and glaring cleaning powders. Clipping increases brittleness, so keep faithfully to the contour of the half moon. At night, apply cuticle cream. Or dip finger tips in hot lemon juice, massage one with an absorbent cotton dumbbell. Manicuring may be responsible. Drink milk, eat lettuce.

Frown lines, inflicted through bad facial habits or because of impaired vision, should be treated to warm, moist compresses, followed with a heavy tissue cream, rubbing with the fingers. Start in middle of forehead, place thumb at lower end of brow, first fingers at upper end. Stay finger stationary, run upward with thumb. Repeat. Smooth into nose and pinches. That lifts up the eyes.

ENDEAVOURERS' S. S.

The Endeavourers' Sunday School class met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mahood on Friday evening, March 24. The meeting opened with the singing of the hymn "We Have in Jesus" followed by prayer by Mr. Mahood. Extract which Clifford Elliot read the Scripture lesson, Matt. 5:1-16. Mahaffey, as manifested amongst us since his sudden change of Dundas Street Mission on July 1st, 1932.

We cannot speak too highly of his loving, gospel message on each Sabbath to Sabbath—his visitation of sick beds, and from home to home bringing prayer, worship and consolation into the humble abodes of our mission folk.

Guests, Cue for Baby's Tantrums

Its Usually Protest at Upsetting of His Habits

(By Constance Cameron)

"I never knew it to fail," exclaimed the mother, just as sure as Sonny gets a contrary fit on, that's the time we always have company."

But I suspect the mother was thinking from the viewpoint of the farmer's wife who complained "I declare! Every time a letter of hers goes up my fool hens stop laying."

It is obvious that any prize skylarking because the hens stop laying. It is equally obvious that Sonny's irritating tricks and guests in the house just coincidental, not that Sonny's misbehaviour somehow turns guests, to the host. But because there are guests, his habits are thrown out of gear. Mother gets nervous and a muddled state of affairs ensues.

To start with, Sonny gets more attention than he is used to. Meal hours are off schedule. Rather than make a scene at the table, mother lets him eat at forbidden time of diet. To keep things peaceful she lets him stay up a little longer than usual. If the laughter of grown people wakes him at eleven o'clock and he begs for a piece of cake that is always served downstairs, he is very apt to get it. And all the while, mother is becoming more and more nervous so that even everybody happy. By the time the guests depart, Sonny is inserting mother's beaded feelings, and getting back into routine is somewhat of a problem.

Keep Child to Schedule

But mother has a right to see her friends in comfort then, of course. And I see no ironbound reason for setting all these hours to keep with a child, except that so far as possible to keep his life in routine. Even by having on an all extra helper (possibly a girl from the home to work after school) and telling her what he is used to doing and when. His meals should be in his room or the breakfast nook at his usual eating time. The helper should quietly put him to bed at the usual time. She should not be allowed to romp with his playmates as much as possible. But, most of all, she should be sometimes beyond our means, excuse herself from your guests and insist that Sonny live as usual and be with you. Children with grown folks who go their pleady way rent their own and don't have what they've wrought with the child.

ESPERANTO

Mr. Hugo Gerlach of Picton R. 4, has received from the Lord Mayor of the Esperanto Cathedral City, Cologne, Dr. Konrad Adenauer, president of the Provincial State Council, a communication in which he writes the Twenty-fifth Esperanto Universal Congress to his city. Dr. Adenauer's message is as follows:

"I rejoice that I have the opportunity in this way to send Universal Congress of Esperanto in Paris my best greetings and good wishes for successful work. The aims to construct by means of the Esperanto, of the languages a bridge from people to people and to create a means of understanding, in the literary sense of this word, are of a most keen upholding and heartiest sympathy. Especially in my country, in their effort to promote the Esperanto language already have attained great success for which I offer my congratulations to them.

"I am glad and thankful that the Twenty-fifth Universal Congress of Esperanto, in the summer of this year, will take place in Cologne on Rhine, where Esperanto movement has been the traditional, cultural work for many years and that, at last, is for every reason suitable to worthy and kind hospitality which its walls such a meeting of men of the world and working for reciprocal world understanding.

"And so, from my whole heart, I present today to the Universal Congress of Esperanto my greeting of welcome and that of the city of Cologne, faithfully hoping that the success of the people and the recovery of the world-wide economy shall decidedly progress them.

"(Signed) ADENAUER.

RESIDENTIAL STS. BEING CLEANED

Spring cleaning of the city streets is being carried out by the department of public works today. Assisted by a few extra men, who have been hired by the department, the street sweeper, which has appeared in a new coat of varnish, has been making the rounds of the residential districts. On nearly all streets the packed ice, which has been left from the recent snow fall is rapidly disappearing under the onslaught of the bright sun.

So recently were the Himalayas raised to their present height, that men may have been on earth when the ranges went through their last upheaval and rise.

Recent excavations of Pompeii show the humble homes and shops in the waterfront section of the city.

Out of the Beauty Box

(By Helen Follett)

It is a sobbing shame that, in this universal crusade toward the beauty goal, more women don't pull themselves up, stand properly, walk splendidly, all unaccented. The body is then highly energized, muscles carry on the figure, retains its youthful outline. Women with shapes like crepe paths mourn about their fat tonnages, when it is not fat at all that makes the body but muscles that have gone slack through the habit of slumping. Posture is more important than complexion, hair, slick contours before the waistline. Try sitting erect, holding the chest up, pleading as much on the thighs as the chair seat as there is room for, there will be less chance of accumulating width of torso. Chair deformities, the arm folk call them.

A widow's peak is a delicate downward point of the hairline directly in the middle of the forehead. It is considered a mark of beauty. Girls so blessed are urged to comb their hair away from the face, revealing the graceful outline of the blessed halo. With the middle or side parting, this rare quality of beauty is hidden away. Mustn't do.

SIMPLE SAVORY

Start with sausages...

Sausages, sliced onions, canned tomato soup. Place in baking dish the required number of sausages, previously browned with onions and a cup (or less) of tomato soup. Season and put on to cook while you mix the following: 1 cup flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon Keen's Mustard, 1 egg, 1 cup milk. Beat this mixture well and pour over the partially cooked sausages. Bake until nicely browned—and there you are.

A really delicious and nourishing luncheon for four people—at reasonable cost. Simple Savory makes possible a real economy in the family food budget. And its flavour, so subtly appealing, will be the cause of much favourable comment—provided you have not overlooked that ½ teaspoon of Keen's Mustard in the recipe.

BELLEVILLE MERCHANTS CARNIVAL

--Notes--

"Miss Better Times", operating today in the coupon stores, is being assisted by a host of dollar chasers, and is having many a new one escape, her slender figure and its slightly Egyptian Intelligence not signifying evidence of having a strong clue. She has had many surprises given and is adding her ingenuity against that of the merchants without failing to course to hiding. She is on the job all the time and unsuspected dollar chasers have only themselves to blame.

Boys and girls aplenty will take part in the Kiddies' Parade next Saturday afternoon. This event promises to be very interesting and the prizes are fine, including great palms to make cradleable displays.

If any young city can show better business tonnage or more attractive stores than Belleville for this great shopping event they have not yet been heard from. Cook's tour through the various stores today was a very interesting experience.

If folks in Toronto knew of the money-saving values being given by Belleville business men, this event would be crowded by a rush down the highway greater than the heights of Vimy Ridge and the municipal plant blew up. Toronto never saw such splendid values.

Bring out your baby carriage Friday afternoon. Prize numbers will be dropped in every baby carriage in the business section at noon, one of which will draw a valuable prize. Don't forget to bring just bring the baby down town in its carriage and the merchants' coupons with it.

Many citizens are guessing on the number of beans in the jar displayed in the big window of Hamilton Grocers. Did you ever try to count one or two thousand beans . . .

It was a joyous, happy, care-free throng, who crowded the down town streets last night, window shopping before the greatest sale in the history of the city commenced. The merchants have heartily co-operated and the windows of the stores carrying the "Belleville Bigger Bargain Days" signs with Public Service of N. J. up a point. Miscellaneous issues were the 10 to 14 points included American Sugar, Great Western Sugar, Commercial Solvents, United States Smelting and United States Industrial Alcohol.

The Belleville Citizens' Band and Pipers with Wee Jamie Clarke, leading the procession, marched to the downtowners with a band concert at the four corners of the principal intersection of Front street. It was almost impossible to above one's way through the crowds at the intersection but everybody was happy.

Interesting in the extreme was the sight of many a child, pencil in hand, with pencil and pad during from window to window, checking down the letter and number things might be the lucky one in the competition being carried on by the committee. The competition has provided wholesome amusement all the day long and the merchants have no doubt made sales through their window displays.

Some of the stores in addition to the cash prize coupons are giving store prizes of big value, some of great use to couples of nationally advertised goods.

The first prize drawing will be Friday morning at 10.30 in the four quarters when the luckiest shoppers of Thursday will draw for the big prize being allotted. On Saturday morning at 10.30 the drawing will take place at Victoria square, and Saturday evening at 10.30 the last drawing will take place.

Coupons are given with every purchase in the stores participating and shoppers have the opportunity of getting back more than they spend. So, buy early and often, and your bank may become money-logged.

Happy days are here again — just as the smiling throng of satisfied shoppers.

This is the treat of Belleville merchants—a treat which means money in bigger and better bargains in all lines.

In the Word Building Contest, part of the numerous contests which are being conducted by Belleville Merchants during Belleville's Bigger Bargain Days, the following winners were picked at Delaney's store yesterday morning as the first to hand in the names of the stores which spell the phrase "Spending Is Employment—Belleville's Bigger Bargain Days Will Give You A Great Opportunity":

1st Mr. Harry Smack, 404 Pinnacle street; 2nd, Miss Jessie Bell, 21 Octavia Street; 3rd, Mrs. M. Revell, 48 St. Charles Street.

The bicycle parade will take place Saturday morning at ten o'clock instead of Saturday afternoon as the original plan was announced. The parade will start from near the upper bridge and will proceed down Front Street to Dundas street, along Dundas to Pinnacle, southerly up Pinnacle street to Bridge street, along Bridge street to Front street and up Front street to the headquarters of the B.B.B.D. in the store next to the Capitol theatre. Tickets will be given here to the first twenty-five riders who apply to them upon presentation of the tickets in the windows of the various stores.

The competition is open to boys and girls for the best decorated bicycle.

A MARTYR TO RHEUMATISM

It must have taken some time for this man's rheumatism to have become so severe. . . . But he does not say much about that. But he does make it clear that it needed very four or five months of Kruschen to make him forget all about the pain he once suffered.

This is what he writes :—" I have often seen Kruschen announcements in the papers, and I think it is only fair that I also should give my testimony. I have read Kruschen Salts for over two years, and I started to use it as I was troubled with rheumatism very badly, chiefly in my legs. I had to use a bad, I used to fall down in the street. But that is by no means I have never felt anything at all ; in fact, I have forgotten altogether what rheumatism is. I used to dread going out, but now it is more valuable than gold."—J. L.

Each "little daily dose" of Kruschen contains a number of salts and mineral salts which tone up all your organs of elimination, so that your skin and stomach—and keep them working smoothly and efficiently as Nature intended. SHAW FORCED DOWN, AUTOIST GIVES A LIFT

Driver Fails to Recall a Cock-eyed Funny Saying

SCREEN STAR SOBS

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., March 30, (AP)—George Bernard Shaw, who has frequently made fun of the foibles of motion picture makers in Hollywood, New York, London and elsewhere, was forced to discover a few additional facts today.

The white-whiskered Irish dramatist, who has been here but night on the Romance of Britain, travelling by way of the Panama Canal and Honolulu, got the point of an around the world joke.

While the hypercritical iconoclast left in his wake in Southern California a trail of laughter, a bronchial tube which was imagined by his visit to Hollywood, a motion picture director would return sometime and show how he could make people laugh.

Shaw's brief sojourn, carrying him from the William Randolph Hearst estate at San Simeon to Los Angeles, was forced down on the highway by motor trouble. Director George Cuy O'Connor, a spokesman of the film colony in the city of the Angels, happened along in his chauffeured limousine. He offered to take Shaw and accepted O'Connor's invitation for a homeward ride to Hollywood.

"Say, I don't think of a half dozen funny stories right now," said O'Connor, "but I'll tell you one I've heard that's really funny."

Ann Harding and Alice Brady, two actresses, probably share O'Connor's confidence.

Miss Harding, who had proudly told Shaw of her role as Sarah Bernhardt in "Conversation," the Bernhardt-Coquelin feud picture, said her "21" motion picture had been a physical performance.

"Indeed, it was not," the actress told him, "it was a mental performance."

The picture director, dressing for dinner, emerged from a dressing room, closed the door and started down the hall. Shaw in his old driver to town.

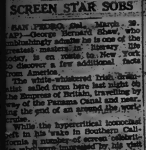
Miss Harding, Miss Brady, the Shaws and O'Connor's chauffeur, who had been with the party since early afternoon, had no one recorded Miss Brady's reply.

TRIP OF PRINCE TO GLASCOW IS MARRED

Communists Try to Cause Trouble On Visit

Glasgow, Scotland, March 30 — (AP)—Red flags flew in Glasgow by the hundreds today as the city observed Prince of Wales' visit, despite a march by two unidentified Communists, allegedly, a Communist, at a corner, stopped and tried to talk to the crowd but his speech, while the Prince was passing, was drowned by the platform and to a police inspector.

When the Prince visited Saint Roch's Secondary School, a window pane was smashed by stones thrown as the Royal car drove up. Police arrested a youth and charged him with disorderly conduct.



Unusual incidents started the day's very busiest.

Two motors he emerged from his bedroom car a man broke through the lines of police and station officials to the door of the Royal car. He told the startled inspector, who stopped him, that he had an engagement with the Prince and carried himself forward and escorted him outside the station.

The Prince came here on a three-day tour of unemployment centers in Scotland.

Carmel Debaters Win Decision From Bethany

At Cannifton on Friday evening, March 26th in the United Church, the W. I. societies of the district in charge met for their annual debate. A large audience was present. Carmel, Bethany, Cannifton and Canifton appointment in their order in the platform discussion. The service was opened with a song service led by Mrs. Williams, vice president, Mr. Chas. Mills followed, taking charge of the remainder of the evening during which hymns were sung and the scripture was read, prayer and prayer was offered by the pastor, Rev. W. R. Martin. Mr. Mills then, on behalf of the Canniffon Y.P.S. welcomed the visiting societies and interested friends, also called upon the pastor to introduce the main purpose of the evening—namely, the debate. Resolved "That conditions in farming communities, fifty years ago were more conducive to happiness than conditions at the present time." Mr. Clayton Eggleton and Mr. J. Walker of Bethany, took the affirmative and Mr. Percy Reynolds and Mr. Seldon Honsen of Carmel, the negative. The debate proved most interesting, as all the debaters presented so many enlightening and very humorous comparisons of past and present. While the judges, Rev. Harold Reid, M.A., Mr. Dixon and Miss Helen Farnham of Belleville, were making the final decision Mr. Reid presented the rendered by four young men, Mr. D. Williams, Palmer Billings, Miss Ethel Reid and Alfred Laughlin. Mr. Reid then announced the decision arrived at by the judges, adding that there were certain factors that made it sometimes difficult to decide but as judgement had to be given, and taking all things into consideration, the judges arrived at the conclusion that the negative had the advantage, and gave judgment accordingly. The decision was received very effectively by Don Williams.

After tendering the thanks of the audience for the splendid and splendid entertainment they had provided, also to the pastor for the use of the church rendered, the pleasant occasion was brought to a close with the Young People's hymn "Just as I am Thine Own to be" and benediction by the Rev. Harold Reid. Refreshments were served at the close.

Ottawa, March 28—(CP)—Niagara Falls' speedy Cataracts are today ready to meet Moncton, N.B., champions of the east, of the Allan Cup competition, following an overwhelming victory over Eldorado of Ottawa last night.

THE PIANO TUNER—

Perhaps you are one of those who imagine that the piano tuner comes around a few of times between each of his visits. Perhaps you are not a man whose quiet calling must inevitably tend to lead him on very exciting adventures. Perhaps, finally, at the least, suspect adventure mixed with his daily job. Yet, the piano tuner has his moments, too. Daily as he goes about his work he takes the notes of Bach forgotten things. Each piano he is in the district he passes by becomes for him to explore. A treasure hunt that puts many wise and wily to shame. For each one would merely associate with a piano. Nobody knows, aside that is, the piano tuner, many remarkable items in those innerspings through the keys and ten fingers to one if there is a piano in the house, somewhere down among the padded felts and basement floor, a bottle of bootleg hooch. Talk with one of them some day and he'll probably tell you of the many things he has found to fight from the hinards of some of the old mahogany he has been called to tune. Possibly the strangest thing of all in the experience of one tuner we talked with was a very old will that had been made out on the scene long dead owner of the piano and then carefully hidden. Letters from lovers, accounts of fight, but, as says had made it impossible, were also found that could be made out. It had never been found. Many other things he has found in the glassyrds of pianos can be included in a set of tales. How they got there no one knows. Certainly the owners of the pianos can be included in a set of tales. Or further add to the mystery, the piano tuner never tells what he finds never. Dead mice are a common find, but the next time you hear somebody haunts the house and cannot be found, don't be too surprised if the piano tuner is called upon to give the piano a once over, too, in your search. Other buttons, fish hooks, old coins, pennies, pocket of music generally yellowed with age, pieces of glass, pencils, pencils and bundreds of other things are found and stowed away sometimes indignant but nearly always grateful housewives. The surprise is not so great if the lady of the house is fortunate or unfortunate enough to possess a young son in the neighborhood of five or six years of age. It all sounds to let the kid rif the piano while standing over him, but on one occasion we call to this piano tuner brought to a halt in the middle of his job one evening. When he got there he was asked to try and get their son out of the inside of the instrument! After the wildly clawing child had been removed by the piano tuner, and hauled forth with the aid of a pair of heavy leather gloves on his hands, the lady explained.

"While (4) heard a noises making a noise inside the piano." she explained to the tuner, "so what did he do but run and get the cat and throw it in!"

NEW WRINKLES—

Being helpful to harassed housewives could be considered one of our hobbies, though not in line with that attempt to pass on a good thing when we hear it we respectfully point to the fact that leather gloves, even old and discarded ones could be included as real accessories to those needed to child upbringing. For example,—we very lately met with a bright tot to manage a five year old son, and do the upstairs cleaning at the same time, has found the system a good one. She merely tells the child to bring plenty of newspapers from the attic and now securely the room on the front porch and then she is busy about the other rooms around the house. Just when Willie try to pull the cats tail, or sneak into the pantry when he isn't looking, with a pair of those things on his hands!

ANOTHER ONE—

And, as if that wasn't enough, here's another. Our scout reports that in another section of the city another mother has found that she can keep her baby as quiet as a church mouse by giving her a ride on the polishing mop every morning. She has a small vickery baton fastened to the front polishing head which the baby is placed while she does the floors. As the mop goes back and forth over the polished floor, the baby rides the ride and the added weight only makes the floor a better job. Our informant reports smiles at her smartness in thinking it all up by herself.

BEER AT LAST—

Rotary's here! You can bet your bottom dollar that the warm weather has finally arrived, and that Rotary has begun meeting once more. One of the sure signs that cold weather has gone for good is the opening of the fire hall doors to the west, and from Rotary lunch will ring the warm weather does not happen, but we've been jubilantly reports that for the first time this year the large doors on the west side were swinging wide open Monday morning.

CONVICT MAY BE DEPORTED

Supreme Court Ruling on Cases Given Royal Clemency

OTTAWA, March 30. —(CP) — Convicts in other parts of Canada, liable by his offence to be deported, will not have to be subject to deportation even if released prior to the expiration of his sentence under parole in virtue of the Royal prerogative. This is the interpretation placed in the statute by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada today.

An act of clemency in releasing the prisoner from prison prior to the completion of the term of his sentence could not be effective in law without the consent of the convict. The unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada was handed down today by Chief Justice Lyman P. Duff on the reference as to the effect of the sumsection of the Governor General of the Royal prerogative of mercy in deportation cases.

The reference was made to the Supreme Court against the deportation of Peter Verigin, the Russian Doukhobor leader, who was sentenced in May last by the Saskatchewan Court to Prince Albert jail for a term of 18 months for perjury. After serving one half of his sentence, he was released, and was about to board ship at Halifax for Russia under deportation proceedings when Judge Mellish rendered his decision.

Madoc Meets Grill's Garage in Finals for Burrow's Cup Winning 2 Games in One Night

Defeat Picton and Then Eliminated Belleville-Frankford Team

OVERTIME PLAYED

Fox, Frankford Goalie Gave Great Exhibition in Twine

Rapping home two goals in rapid succession the Madoc hirelings have survived the elimination series playoff in group "2" of the Hastings and District League when they defeated the Frankford "Millers" by the score of 3 to 2 in a game which went 10 minutes overtime at the Madoc Memorial Hall. The series was in session proved one too many for the Millers as it was the second game they had tired long before the second game had reached the 8:37 minutes mark.

By winning the five game series the Madoc crew finished with the score of 3 to 2, the Madoc team carried the night's meed. Jack Grill, the boy who in turn had blasted the Frankford net in the second game of the evening, by the score of 1 to 0. The final tilt brought the Madoc-Frankford together with the Madoc club coming down in front after searching for the odd game right to meet the veering leading Grills' Garage outfit of Belleville in the semi-finals on Friday night at the arena.

The Madoc team which has collected over carry the play to the Frankford boys in doing so they became tired and lay weary with the result that the Madoc forces rode roughshod over the "Millers" in the overtime period needed to decide the issue. Fox, voted the outstanding player of the game was the hero of the Madoc contingent as he turned in one of the finest exhibitions of net tending seen in this city for many a moon. In front of the Madoc net was Jack Grill, McGrath, who was drafted by the "Millers" from the Grill's Garage, carried the bulk of the losers' efforts. Their second line with Carter and Brownscombe also starred in their starting team mates.

No score was in evidence until the overtime period had well got under way when Jack Grill snapped home Arley's rebound only to have the latter worry some Millers later when Madoc scored their second tally. Rookie Don Whytock and the redoubtable Orval Fox, of the forwards Henderson, Airey and Armbury hoked the ball.

The line-ups:

Madoc 2; Picton 1

In the opening game of the elimination series the Madoc seasons showed cooperative smooth combination and staged a third period rally to defeat the Picton "Flyers" by the score of 3 to 2.

The game was rather slow and became interesting only once penalty being handed out by Referee Billy Sherry. Henderson, Airey and Henderson flashed by sikey and Armbury counted the two markers for the winners, while Don Whytock was the star forward on the Madoc defence. Except for a lapse of life in the second period Scotty Green of Picton had a good game with Embury looking the best of the alternates used.

For the losing team the second line of Hunt, Gaskin and Hall looked by far the superior of the offerings. The team giving goalie Dave Young rather poor support on the defence, but in fact checking and rearguard activities.

The line-ups:

Picton—goal Young; defence, Boyle and Hodgins; centre Mysell; wings, Hunt and Hall. Subs, Hobbs, Hubbs, Cole, Wright and Sergeant.

Frankford 1; Trent 0

Upsetting the pre-game dope the Frankford "Millers" skinstaned the Trenton "Imperials" when they applied the white-wash brush and blanked the Northerners by the score of 1 to 0 in the second game of the game saw the Millers carry the play throughout and well deserved the win that was theirs. Art Fox in the nets for the Millers proved to be the star of the game, when he literally rose to heights to stave off certain defeat, especially in the third period, after the Trent management moved five men forward and had a barrage of pucks towards the Frankford goal. Fox rose to the occasion literally robbing the Trent crew of what looked like certain goals.

Ackers and McGrath carried the brunt of the rear guard work with the Fraser brothers playing well. Finnegan bagged the only goal of the game when he drifted the rubber past McGee mid-way through the first period on a pass from Jordan, Kobelka and Allaire also played well on the alternate line.

Although the Trent crew mercifully bombarded the "Millers" citadel for the final frame they could not seem to muster the extra scoring punch needed. The Millers Quinn, Hashotte, Merraw and the Gerald brothers looked the best with Jones carrying the majority of the work on the defence.

The line-ups:

Frankford — goal, Fox; defence, McGrath and Ackers; centre, A. Fraser; wings, G. Fraser and Finnegan. Subs, Jordan, Kobelka and Burtt.

Trenton—goal, McGee; defence, A. Gerald and LaPointaine; centre, Rashotte; wings, Quinn and F. Gerald. Subs, O. Gerald, Sharp, Hanson and Grosse.

TRENTON HAS REAL CHANCE

Cities Service Must Overcome Two Goal Lead to Win

Enjoying a two goal lead the Trenton "Imperials" meet the local Cities Service team in the second game of the playoffs which will decide senior group of the Belleville and District League when they clash this night. Following last Tuesday night's game in which the Trenton supporters have signified their intention of attending this final game in this year, donning the colors Centerton trophy.

Manager George LaBrash has his "imperials" clicking perfectly while the Belleville team has looked their first defeat of two seasons at the hands of the visitors. Although the Belleville team had the "Others" on Tuesday night, a different story may be told this night by Manager Dudley tonight. Facing a two goal lead the locals will have to literally carry the play throughout to give them enough to open their attack in the evening's card. The nabs will have to this night should be a "pip" —it brings together McColl of the airport and Ted Bentley of Napanee, who are the two leading scorers and goals respectively. Should be equally as good with Frankford Hunt line with George Hunt scoring his best hockey in three seasons now, Johnson, Dennis and Powers are all set to make the real classy trio of alternates.

The probable line-ups with Bill Green as referee are:

Cities Service—Goal Tice; defence Sherry and Rigby; centre Covert; wings Keenan and McDonald; subs Nicoll, Weir and McGuire.

Trenton—Goal Chambers; defence York and Bowen; centre Filion; wings Bohan and Bégin; subs Johnson Powers and St. Denis.

CURRENT SPORT

Knocks and Boosts

As Tuesday's issue of the Trenton Daily Star, sports editor Lou Marsh gave a short resume of the series of the Belleville "Hawks" who meet the Niagara Falls seniors in the eastern play-offs for the Allan Cup. Mr. Marsh referred to Percy Nicklin, the coach of the "Hawks", who he alleged hails from Bellevville. Mr. Marsh failed to state whether Percy is a Bellevillite at from Belleville, Hillsdale, Belleville, Nova Scotia, or Belleville, Ontario, however. After making a close survey of the past hockey seasons, and what have you, in this immediate district we could not locate the name Nicklin as having been connected with hockey in the Belleville, Ontario, community. None of the old time hockey fans recall a Mr. Nicklin in this district, but then we may be wrong since he is now being connected with hockey in recent years, therefore we take it for granted that Mr. Nicklin must hail from some other Belleville, rather than from "Belleville the Beautiful" on the shores of the Bay of Quinte.

The annual trek or migrating of hockey players has started rather early this year, and the majority of wandering puckists have been received and numerous players are changing their abode, looked their first defeat of two seasons at the hands of the visitors. Although the Belleville team had the "Others" on Tuesday night, a different story may be told this night by Manager Dudley tonight. Facing a two goal lead the locals will have to literally carry the play throughout to give them enough to open their attack in the evening's card. The nabs will have to this night should be a "pip" —it brings together McColl of the airport and Ted Bentley of Napanee, who are the two leading scorers and goals respectively. Should be equally as good with Frankford Hunt line with George Hunt scoring his best hockey in three seasons now, Johnson, Dennis and Powers are all set to make the real classy trio of alternates.

The probable line-ups with Bill Green as referee are:

Trenton—Goal Chambers; defence York and Bowen; centre Filion; wings Bohan and Bégin; subs Johnson Powers and St. Denis.

Manager Jacobi announced last night that he was turning the arena, in its entirety, over to the Belleville Amateur Athletic Association. Manager "Jake" thinks well of his staff and is showing his appreciation of their season's efforts by allowing them to open the arena on Saturday afternoon for public skating, with all proceeds to go to the association. Naturally the "arena gate" are all agog over the possibilities and will open the rink from 2 to 6 p.m. for skating.

In passing we wonder if the "grant and groan" artists are contemplating another season in Belleville. We understand that the ice will be removed from the arena early next week so as to give other sporting activities an opportunity of a few weeks of the melting. There has been some talk of trying to stage a golf tourney this spring. An exhibition game might add some interest.

In all probability a fourth junior O.B.A.A. ball club from Belleville will be represented at tonight's annual meeting of the Hastings County Junior League when the South End A. C. put in an appearance. Dame Rumour has the South End members of speed interested in piloting a team in the loop. Although the piloting of four teams in junior O.B.A.A. competition will naturally mitigate the chances of the winning team to a certain degree, when they consider further that the Belleville "Hawks" will have a tendency to develop more players for the future besides giving many more aspiring lads an opportunity to play in the games, there is a possibility of Trenton and Napanee coming into the league thus assuring the loop of six starters at least. The four local clubs, besides Moose Juniors, B.A.A.A., Crystalaire and the newly formed South End A. C.

Perhaps the local Cities Service outfit will consider filing they have a real tough argument on their hands now. After watching some of the players perform on Tuesday night it has been suggested that perhaps they left their proper location at home. If they would but bring them to the arena locally and show them to the Trenton players before the game, perhaps the "Imperials" would realize their handicap.

On the other hand the "Oilmen" face the acid test tonight and if they can come in front of the "Imperials" it will naturally be because they are the superior club. Two goals are a lot of goals to pull down these days but the Bellevilles are not discouraged as they feel they get a bad game all of their scribes on Tuesday. Anynight's game will be played by a fresh, we understand with the Dr. J. J. Robertson trophy to be presented to the winner at the conclusion of hostilities.

It took the Madoc intermediates just ten minutes of overtime to eliminate the Frankford "Millers" and earn for themselves the right to meet Walter Grills' charges in the finals of group "2" of the local semi-pro league. The Madoc outfit after having dropped the first game of the series to the Millers, battled Trent to a 1 to 0 score and then turned around and played Madoc, who defeated Picton in the home's rest after trimming Picton. The "Millers" just couldn't pull the iron man stunt and were beaten by the better team. Madoc also star of the night, during the three games played, would be Earl Fox, the Frankford goalie, we'd say.

BASEBALL WAR IN KINGSTON

Players Demand Control of Club And Want Sen. Franchise

Kingston, March 30—A baseball war broke out here Wednesday in which Kingston's team in the Central Ontario League is concerned.

Having definitely decided not to play in the Central Ontario Baseball League this year under the same management as last year, twenty of the players of the 1932 championship team have broken away from the present management and at a meeting elected their own officers and announced they would continue as the senior O.B.B.L. team representing Kingston.

At this meeting the players said that they were dissatisfied over last year's management and for that reason would not play with it. The meeting was fully attended and a vote showed that the twenty signing 15 players were in favor of changes. Irwin Smith, A. J. Vince, Gervaise Stone, Bernard Mennell Cup hockey player, and Sid, Jack Quinn, C. H. Fournier, C. Scratton, T. Godfrey, R. M. Elliott, Bert Hall and Ken Meadows.

Of the senior players only Connor and McQuade failed to vote for the change.

Officers Elected

The executive of twenty members was chosen as follows: Honorary, Bruce Hopkins. Aid. W. P. Peters, Aid. G. Hall, M.P.P. Bracy, C. Fournier, J. F. Edwards, C. O. Fuger, W. R. Davies, W. F. Nickle, K.C., James Swanwick, W. Hughes, J. H. S. Derry, Warden W. B. McLaughlin, Professor Durand and L. A. Hendry.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President Harry Sonmer, Vice-President Irwin Smith, Secretary, W. L. Kennedy, Treasurer, and Business Manager, Stan Hall, Manager Jack Quinn.

The players stated that they intended to apply for approval to Ontario Baseball League and apply for admittance as the Kingston team representing Kingston. They pointed out that they were in a position to field last year's senior team and had several other players who are anxious to play with them. While declining to state their grievances publicly, it is learned on Saturday said that they had been dissatisfied with the way the club was managed last year and felt that they should have more voice in their quest for Ontario baseball honors than they had been given recently. They stated that they should be granted admittance as the Kingston team as the present club will comprise almost all the senior players in the city.

Trenton Certain

In the meantime league officers of the team last year and who were elected at a former meeting said that they intended to continue as before.

"We're going to have a team in the O.B.B.L. even if it has to be with the present players," one of the players said Aid. Frank Smith, re-elected to the league executive, added. "We are not sure of the C.O.D. league this season," said Aid. George Davies, who was also elected last year, and who was re-elected a fifth time. "We intend to continue and we have plenty of good ball players."

BASKETBALL

The usual Wednesday night double header in the Inter-City League basketball resulted in a win for the "Y" boys over the Kiltie Aces 36-32 in the opening game and in a high scoring game the C. A. P. dropped a tough game to the Trenton Grads 18-17.

Fallen by the wayside the Golds close enough lost the game for the Aces. Ken Meadows, manager-coach of the team of the Golds was able to break away from the pack for five to five more or less soft baskets. On the other hand the Grads deserved credit as they played consistent ball and to better purpose than they have shown on previous occasions. Hall, Lennox in this game showed the greatest form of the evening, amongst nearly all the players.

Albert Lennox, 10; Ridley, 7; Snell 6; Rockie 6; Warling 5; Jones 2; Rahoo—Total 36.

C. A. P. Rutherford 10; Ridley 10; Dirlon 6; Wallers 2; Mott 8; Total 36.

Referee—Vic White.

With only a few minutes of play remaining, Trenton Grads came from behind to win a close checking, low scoring game from the C. A. P. were in the lead 10-6 at half time and at three quarter time were late than to lose out by one point. In fact on the nights play the Grads served a win as both their attack and defence appeared to be working smoother than that of the Grads however, such are the breaks in any game. Grads played without the services of Frank Langdon which made a noticeable difference in the team system of play, the latter being decidedly regarded last night's game. In order to avoid stepping on the toes of one of the All Force players stretched on the floor at the time, Taylor of the Grads received a severe shaking up as a result of said player's knee coming in contact with the ribs. Following a short rest however the big centre of the Grads was able to return to the game.

R. C. A. F.—Pafford 2; Burdes 4; Wray; Reeves 2; Bradbent 5; Mil-shall 5—Total 18.

Trenton Grads—Taylor 6; Chamberlain; B. Langdon 4; Gray; Scarlett; Grey; Wallace—Total 17.

Referee—"Bucky" Cather.

In order to complete the regular schedule and allow time for a playoff series before Easter both games scheduled for April 5th will be played on Monday the 3rd, the Y Grads and Y Purples meeting at 7 p.m. and the Jewel Aces and Trenton Grads playing at 8 p.m. Games scheduled for April 12th will be played on the 8th with the final game commencing at 7.30 instead of 8.15 p.m.

BRANDON AND REGINA STILL DEADLOCKED

Saskatoon and Fort William are Still Even

Toronto, March 30—(CP)—Western Canada is encountering unexpected difficulty in its quest for decisions in the Allan Cup and Memorial Cup hockey playdowns, it is the latter series, the Al Ritchie-Brandon Regina series which saw 150 minutes hockey against Brandon Native sons and the net result has been a goal apiece.

In the senior ranks, the same condition exists. Fort Williams and Saskatoon have yet to score a goal despite the fact they have engaged in two games, one of which went 30 minutes overtime.

Last night at Winnipeg, Brandon popped in a goal shortly after the opening whistle and Regina Reginas left it until the final three minutes to score the equalizer and after a half hour's extra play the game was left in that state.

At Toronto last night Niagara Falls obtained the jump on Moncton Hawks in the eastern Allan Cup series when they eked out a 1-0 win, a single goal sufficient to give them the second game Friday. Maxie Kaminsky scored in the first period was the only score of the game.

Fort William and Saskatoon will try and settle the question of supremacy at Winnipeg tonight and Montreal Maroons and Montreal Redmen will tangle at Montreal in the first game of the Eastern Canadian junior championship.

MONCTON HAWKS ARE NO PUSHOVERS

Niagara Falls Hold One Goal Lead at Toronto

BY ELMER DULMAGE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, March 30—(CP)—The Galasheck of Niagara Falls, will on a date for going the unexpected, held a single goal margin over Moncton Hawks today in a two-game race to the finish for the Allan Cup—perhaps just to show the form chaps aren't always wrong.

They sat back the doughty challengers from the eastern seaboard let them have the play, and when he, total-goal series that will be finished Friday night, counting in the only goal during a listless first period and staving off the Hawks through a desperate last period that were not so dull.

The Hawkmen had more experienced than any senior hockey team that has been in the city since the playdown wars in many a year, but Niagara Falls had considerably more polished champions of Ontario ranks a relentless attack that seldom was realized when the Hawks managed out to be effective.

Maxie Kaminsky skated around, the Moncton defence in the first period, but showed with a blazing shot that goalie Jimmy Foster couldn't get near, the Hawks unfortunately were unable to repeat through most of the second and all the third period. It failed to produce a goal but it might very well have accounted for two or three.

BUILD UP A GOOD TEAM

Tweed Unearths Many Players in Town Leagues

Tweed (Special)—The town hockey League, senior and junior, have unearthed a wealth of talent and when another winter rolls around, Tweed should be able to place a championship team on the ice. The Senior League, however, should be reorganized. In addition to the Tweed Athletics, Coe-George, Alex and Fred, members of the old gizard, Marsh, Shangus, Lavender, Bill Wallace, Bonisteel, Radbotte, Merraw and Terry furnished the opposition. Players who choose from. There is no dearth of prospects for the forwards, either. In addition to McGee, Curry, Mc-Donough and Thompson, have given nice exhibitions, the last named showing up particularly well. Among the new players coming into the Leal boys and Reeves have given evidence of considerable ability.

Grand Forks County, North Dakota, figures that by spending $15,000 for poison grasshopper bait last year the county saved $400,000 worth of crops.

Pre-Game Comment as
N. H. L. Teams Take Ice

Toronto, March 30—(CP)—Hockey's four greatest teams today prepared for another night of the wrestling out process that will leave the two survivors possessors of the age-stained Stanley Cup, symbol of world supremacy. And the international angle of the situation insured bumper houses for the two games scheduled tonight.

Detroit Red Wings buoyantly charged into New York for the first of a two-game total-goal series final with Lester Patrick's high-stepping Rangers. Conquerors of Rangers in four of six games this season, Detroit enter the round with confidence unshaken by the loss of Ebbi Eddie Wiseman from right wing, when they eliminated Montreal Maroons.

Rangers, perennial contenders for championship rank, are fresh from victory over the faded Canadiens and unbrushed by their regular season's record against Detroit, first team to shut them out in 30 games here realize they need all their experience and famed scoring punch to humble Jack Adams' flock.

Toronto Maple Leafs are back home awaiting the arrival of Boston Bruins at noon today to renew the fight for possession of Canada's hockey crown. Sole hope of keeping the cup they won last year north of the International border, Leafs realize that the men are much hearthened by invasion of Boston and, even break in two games at Boston.

When weighing the chances of the two teams experts point to the advantage on the goals' side of every in the aggregate with its greater scoring power from any one line-time struggles, increasing strength in tabored players and the leadership of some 13,000 cheering them to victory.

Against this place the unconsidered power packed in hefty rugged forms of Irwin players. Tapered this peak condition at the tail end of the season, Art Ross' men are at their best for the series with top high scoring forward lines that rank with the smartest in the game.

Each will be eager to capture today's game to put the series on ice. It will have in forcing the loser to the defensive, and with the Stanley Cup finals, Dick Irvin has expressed himself as determined to end the series Saturday, if at all possible. Ross expects an open, fast meeting, that victory will go, as in the two previous games, to the team gives the individual break.

The Third Woman

By Ruth Logan

The District Attorney pulled up the door closed behind his self and looked at Mrs. Dalzell who stood regarding the Dalzell suicide, I presume?"

"I don't believe you were ever in my life before," said Mrs. Dalzell in a dumb, blank voice.

"Thank you. Otherwise you don't have to. I've been told I haven't any further use for the night course in lying. Those boys play rough. So you or do you not want settled with yourself you to tell me that you did Chalmer's child more wrongfully?"

The man's face lightened eager. The girl was taking a thoughtful inventory of her handbag.

"Here is the evidence that he was Dalzell's child—a letter signed by Dalzell admitting the fact. I didn't know she knew about it."

"Right in here, please Mr. Lefty," Mr. Malone was saying in his best hotel manner. "Here's Mr. Lawton, that he was one of the first important guests to establish his friendly complete skill.

Then the first world of the District Attorney wiped the affable smile from Lawton's face.

"Lawton, you are a damned liar. Your friend has confessed that it already knew it, Jennings," Hall dragging you in."

"Hide, stepped Lawton. "He wasn't my pal luck. Why should I lie for him?"

"You cannot enough to cover up for him."

Suddenly the door opened and a red-faced man thrust half his body into the room. "Chief, there's a shooting for a moonlighter. He's cornered his confession. The telegram did it."

"What telegram?" demanded Lawton.

"The one from Ist that he grouped it. It got caught in the slow for the publish," was the quick reply. "Even chief thinks we couldn't think his way out of that bit of evidence."

"Confound that!" exclaimed Lawton. I signed for it and read it to him while he was shaving. I've got it to-my pocket right now."

"Hand with murder on their minds get nervous Lawton. Just just forget about that. You've lied to me once. You going to give me one more chance to get out a little easier. If your story jibes with the girl's, Chalmer's confession I'll do my best for you. And I said to you."

The truth was the only thing Lawton could think of that would help with a confession. He turned to her but it fell flat. I wanted claim to have been there, but his chest ten minutes as white as death. He had walked right in the trap. He had walked right in the trap. He had left the knife beside the wax, took up the girl friend. Did you know it is— He offered gold and she was holding on for patience, she said something nasty and he socked her. She went out like a light. He tried to revive her. No pulse— no heart— Well—you finish it.

"Thanks, Lawton. You've been talking into a photograph, Malone, go over to the office and get Fred Chalmer, Orton has been waiting him."

An hour later the District Attorney entered a grab house on a dingy side street. The girl who established him had been weeping but in spite of the dismal eyes her face was radiant.

"You've got a confession," he said quietly. "Are you framed him. He didn't drop that cigarette case. The girls fix."

"Yes, I framed him." the girl sobbed. I took it to a telegraph office. I just made a copy and crumpled it up to give you."

"But you have not explained how you knew he had killed Alice Dalzell. Incidentally it can only be manslaughter."

"Yes, I knew that before I came to you. He—he talks in his sleep. Will consider that evidence? And she was sobbing convulsively.

The District Attorney patted her shoulder soothingly.

"You poor little kid! I should you thought you would be glad. No wonder you hated the dirty rat."

"Hate him!" cried the girl wildly. "Why, you fool, I love him. I tell you I love him. I'm the one that sent that telegram was from! From his fiancee, Elvina Breckenridge! was coming home to marry him. Well—she won't wrest him after a few years residence in the state of Nevada. And then—maybe he'll come back to me."

$85,000 FIRE AT MONTREAL

Montreal, March 29 (CP)—Fanned by strong hurricane from the northwest on Beaudry Street in the east end today an apartment burned in the paint shop of a blazing garage three hours over the rear of a row of dwellings. One fireman was injured before the fire was under control. Damage was estimated at $45,000. The cause of the outbreak was not established. The garage had not been used for some time and the fire had made considerable headway before it was discovered. When the flames reached the paint shop an explosion blew out the sash and threw flames on the dwellings. Mrs. Jack Stricker, woman attended their children and fled. Their families stood at the rear of the fire lines and watched the fire-fighters from safe distance.

District Fire Chief Emile Lefort, who was badly cut in the hand by flying glass. No one else was injured.

MAR 30 MR. AND MRS. — YOU NEVER CAN TELL

TARZAN AND THE GO LDEN LION. No. 12

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan only laughed at Jane's fears. Werper was dead and an earthquake wasn't likely to happen again. Those had been his enemies on the previous trips to Opar. "Shall you take Korak with you?" she asked. "No," said Tarzan, "he must remain with you. Our son and the Golden Lion surely ought to protect you." he laughed, trying to dispel her fears. "Fifty of the Waziri warriors shall go with me. They can carry the gold—enough this time to last our lives. A week later they set out on the long trail that leads to Opar.

Behind the ape-man marched fifty giant Waziri. These were the pick of the war-like tribe that had adopted Tarzan as their chief. Jane and Korak waved farewell to the party. As it filed off across the plain, the rumbling roar of Jad-bal-ja came to the ape man's ears. Did the Golden Lion sense that unheard of dangers were to threaten his master before the two should meet again? At last the voice of Numa trailed off into nothingness as the warriors were swallowed up in the distance.

Opar lay a good twenty-five days' trek from the Greystoke estates. Upon the return journey, ladened as they would be with the ingots of gold, their pace grew would be slower. Because of this the ape-man had allowed two months for the venture. They carried no supplies. All were hunters and were moving through an abundant game country. A horn bows and a few leaves provided their shelter by night. Spears, arrows and the powers of their great white chief were all the equipment they needed.

Mid-afternoon of the third week Tarzan, ranging far ahead of his blacks in search of game, came suddenly upon the carcass of Numa the lion. A feathered arrow protruded from the animal's flank. What red arrow protruded from the animal's flank. What red arrow attracted the attention of the ape-man was the arrow's weight the arrowhead was of gold. Who but a native of Opar could have fashioned such a weapon? Who but a native of Opar could have fashioned such a weapon? What had brought that slight weapon from some civilized city's sporting goods house into the heart of savage Africa? Tarzan's curiosity was aroused. Also his inherent jungle caution.

CHAPTER VII

A Carter eated Sandra: "Could you come with me now and have a cup of tea?"

"Why, I suppose I should," smiled. "They were looking at each other strangely, smiling and yet nervous. There was a pause.

"Have to go straight home?" he asked.

"Well — ought to....."

Another silence. Her eyes were dark gold in her white face; the bright silver her head turned her brows soft waves of hair to dark gold too.

Carter drew back a little; swallowed.

"But I must talk to you," he said laughing confusedly.

"I think I'd better go home," Sandra said.

She went over to the coal hearer and put on her brown raincoat, shedrew her small brown hat snugly down over her hair. When she turned back Carter was still standing by the fire, looking at her. They walked out to the elevator together.

Downstairs at the big street door Carter put the key in the mail box; the touch of his fingers rubbed Sandra or ayr power to speak.

"Which way do you go, Miss Trumbull?"

"I—I—this way," she said, with an effort.

He delayed her in the doorway.

"You look—awfully—well," he said.

To this Sandra found nothing to say. The home-going world was wheeling about them in the dark night; she was conscious of nose at of it. She saw nothing but the tall man in the spattered raincoat, who was watching her with so strange an expression in his smiling eyes.

"I often think of you," he said, while I was away," Carter added.

"Oh, did you?" Sandra heard her own unnatural voice say.

"Yep. Did you think of me?"

There was a pause; Then almost without her own volition she said slowly:

"I think I did."

And then for a long time they stood looking at each other.

"You did?" Carter asked presently, in a changed tone.

"I think so."

He laughed awkwardly, hopelessly.

"The point is," he said, "how to get you home in this rain."

"Oh, I walk!" the girl said quickly.

"My car is right here in the garage."

"Oh, no, I like to walk. I always walk, it isn't far."

"The coal," he said, "is buried in snow."

"I can imagine."

"How you'd love New York!"

"Perhaps I do. I often think of it."

"Some day—" Carter began, and stopped abruptly. Sandra's face grew rosy and she laughed in embarrassment. Neither spoke for a moment and then the man went on: "Well, do I see you tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow?"

They looked at each other smiling. Then Sandra moved and she and her umbrella vanished into the early winter dark. Carter stood for a full minute, for another minute, motionless where she had left him.

Sandra, walking home, felt strange ly excited, strangely cool. As yet she was not thinking, merely feeling, but it was a delicious, satisfying feeling: it carried her along on wings. It was good to be young, strong; to be walking lightly, swiftly through the friendly downtown streets again.

She slept hardly at all that night and rejoiced in the morning with refreshing, thrilling to the sharp and think of Carter. Toward dawn sleep came, but she was walking to the office duly at ten minutes before 9.

Yesterday Sandra had carried a heavy heart; she had felt all the bitterness of impotent and futile suffering, hating herself and her job. Today everything was different and as she went up in the elevator she felt that she would not have changed places with any one in the world.

At half past 12, going out for her lunch, Miss Curtis stopped at Sandra's desk.

"Miss Trumbull, could you go in to Mr. Carter's office before you go out?"

Sandra looked up composedly, nodded. A minute later, feeling as if it were all a dream, she was alone with Carter Cavendish in his own office.

Her heart gave a great plunge when she saw him; he was standing with his head turned to the door, a tall, square, black-haired young man, in a dark-blue suit.

He turned and nodded to her without smiling. There was a round backed chair beside the desk. He indicated it.

"Will you sit down?" he said, Sandra, without moving her dark gold eyes from his, took it; he sat down in his own chair. He was a little pale, his expression serious.

"First," he said, looking his big hands before him, hesitating at them rather than at her—"first I want to say that I am very sorry for what happened last night. There is no excuse for my conduct of it. There is no—apology that I can offer for my—my—" he stammered on, beginning to plunge in his set speech, "—that I—that—by dear Miss Trumbull, I'm very sorry."

Sandra had linked her own hands also she looking at him quietly with wide-open eyes. She cleared her throat:

"That's all right," she answered simply.

"Is it, Wish," Carter said, as he moved an inkwell and glanced unseeing at some letters. "I wish you would act as if it had not happened."

"I will" Sandra promised earnestly.

"And it would mean a very very happy if you would go right along here," Carter pursued, speaking always in the same careful and formal way—"it would make me very happy if you would go right along here as if nothing had happened."

He paused, not looking at her, reading instead a penciled memorandum on his desk and crumpling it before he dropped it in the wastebasket.

"I never thought of doing anything else," Sandra confessed in a faintly surprised voice.

"You never—" He seemed relieved. He looked at her now, holding his arms. "Then I hope," he said with a smile, "that you will not speak of it again—I hope you will forgive me for being so—well, for overstepping."

JOHN ELLIOTT DIES AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS

Outstanding Career in Banking Life of City is Closed by Death

John Elliott was Prominent Figure in Life of Community

LEADING LAYMAN

Was Recently Appointed to Agricultural Development Board

Taken ill a week ago Sunday last, John Elliott passed away a few minutes before four o'clock Thursday afternoon at his late residence in Highland Avenue after a hard fight for recovery. Since last Saturday grave doubts were expressed by his physician as to the outcome of his illness, but Wednesday a change for the better occurred and hopes in attendance were held hopeful that the worst was passed, and that Mr. Elliott would eventually become a well man. Thursday morning, however, saw a change for the worse, and his physician, Dr. Ponton, says his life began to ebb away and he had not strength remaining to ward off the renewed attack.

One of Belleville's Noteworthy Citizens

In the death of John Elliott, Belleville loses a worthy citizen, who had since coming here in 1908, devoted himself to the welfare of the city in a greater community. He sincerely loved the city in which he spent so many years and in his travels throughout the province and had ever his fundamental welfare at heart, and whenever opportunity arose, Belleville became known.

His membership in and close association with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and his presence on many of their local meetings gave him to meet men of outstanding prominence in the business trade and commerce in Canada, Great Britain and other lands, and these acquaintanceships he was always glad to call his pleasurable duty to develop in the interests of Belleville, and the correspondence in this regard was voluminous, but the recollection of happy friendships formed made this letter writing enjoyable to him. He had intimate friends in all parts of the Empire and it is with sincere regret that the news of his passing is received.

The late friends in Belleville and throughout the adjoining country, side his death has come as a shock. Never seriously ill before in his life, all were hopefully looking forward to a speedy recovery and when the end came it was the most truly missed by hundreds who knew him as one of the most scrupulous of his worthwhile kindness and timely and knowledgeable action. John Elliott is sincerely mourned by a multitude of friends who had thought to see him about for

Former Cabinet Minister Advances Definite Proposals

Sale of Beer And Wines in Licensed Hotels Advocated

TAX MINES

(By Jack Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, March 31 (CP)—Ontario's legislature, stirred by one of the outstanding speeches of the present session, called a halt to the House early today and came up with sentiment discussed the proposals of Mr. Peter Smith, Conservative Member of Sault Ste. Marie and former Minister of Lands and Forests in the Ferguson administration.

Here are Mr. Smith's Queen's proposals to bring back prosperity:

Sale of beer and light wines in licensed hotels.

Taxation of gold mining companies.

Abolition of the voucher system of direct relief.

Complete separation from party politics.

All parties in Ontario to join in a fight against depression.

"Certainly the government will not take kindly to my remarks on these various matters," he said, "but I go with the conviction they can be discussed and threshed out. It is now necessary we have to pocket our pride; to pocket our personal ambitions; to pocket even our party ambitions, in order that the people of this province back to a sound basis."

Then he continued: "It is my view, Mr. Speaker, we should consider extending the sale of beer and light wines to hotels and restaurants under proper supervision."

Premier George S. Henry, who time after time has declared there would be no change of such nature in the Liquor Control Act, sat silent in his seat as Mr. Smith urged the charging of substantial license fees, substantially increased taxation, sale of beer, continuation of the sale of beer and wine in hotels and restaurants and the sale of beer, wine and wine sold in Ontario hotels and restaurants to be the product of Ontario breweries and wineries. He urged, at least 60 per cent. of the revenue from licenses should be restored to the municipalities where the licenses were issued.

Referring to the gold taxation problem, a problem acknowledged to exist against the wishes of Hon. Charles McCrea, Minister of Mines, Mr. Smith urged the mining companies be forced to give up part of their profits for the good of the province.

The province was spending five million dollars more for relief than was necessary, he maintained, by the voucher system of administration, and there was little to be gained in cutting Northern Ontario and other appropriations when the full amount was being wasted.

Mr. Smith's maiden speech came in the course of the budget debate, a debate which began in the afternoon when questions arose, which are likely to bring conflicting sitting states. (Article XIII of the covenant provides detailed revision when such situations arise, and that, at the same time, that this principle of revision cannot be applied except in the times work of the League of Nations of reciprocal interests.

Article 19 provides that Britain and Italy declare that, in case the disarmament convention makes only partial results, the equality should be recognized as due to Germany should be given an equality and that and Germany will undertake to realize these equality rights by stages.

CHANGES MADE IN CABLE SERVICE

Montreal, Que., March 31.—The following statement was issued today by the Canadian Marconi Company and Pacific Telegraphs: "Effective April 1st the present rate of 9d per word service from Canada will be discontinued. In addition the cable night letter rate will be based on one and one-half times the day rate, a minimum of twenty-five words. This rate applies to all countries except Great Britain and Ireland, Belgium, France, Holland and Cuba to which countries there will be no change in the present minimum rate of twenty and twenty-five. The changes were authorized by the cable companies over the week at a recent convention held at Madrid.

Toronto, Mar. 31 (CP)—Bankruptcy of Union Guardian Trust Company in United States will not affect operations of all stores operated by Liggetts Limited in Canada. It is a different company entirely.

Occurs at 15 Mile Creek Near Peachland But None Injured

HAMILTON, March 31.—(CP)—Nineteen cars of a Canadian National freight train were derailed early today in one of the deepest cuts in the cut in the district for several years. No one was injured.

DIVIDEND TAX HALTS TRADE

Dealings in Canadian Bonds Suspended at London

London, March 31—(CP Cable)—Dealings in Canadian bonds were suspended on the stock exchange this morning allegedly because of the proposed imposition of a five per cent tax on interest payable by Canadian debtors to non-residents of Canada.

The proposal was reported from Ottawa.

The suspension of dealings included railway and all Canadian securities certainly regarding the proposed tax on dividends. It was also said to apply to a large number of securities held by British investors in and on the Canadian exchanges.

Leading exchange firms have been making anxious inquiries as to whether the Canadian government to abandon the tax proposal, which is regarded here as unfair to British investors and until the position is clarified there is no chance of "pricing" quotations" for such securities on the London market.

The question requiring clarification is if the tax is to be either on British holders of bonds affected by the tax would be got to deduct the amount payable in Canada before income tax they have to pay in this country.

Retires Small

Toronto, March 31—(CP)—Suspension of dealings in Canadian bonds on the London Stock Exchange "naturally will cause a serious effect in the Canadian market," only time will reveal actual results, Sir Herbert Holt, president of International Banker said today.

"It has never happened before to my knowledge," Sir Herbert added, "and we can only await results."

Sir Herbert said he thought the quantity of Canadian bonds held in Great Britain except that it was also a "large volume".

PLOT PRETENCE

Jews Obliged to Identify Stores For Boycott Campaign

BERLIN, March 31.—(AP)—Nazi storm troopers today cleared Berlin law courts of Jewish judges and attorneys.

Among those ousted was Chief Justice Kurt Stolling. Reports from the United States that Chancellor Hitler's Nazi Party might be persuaded at the last minute to modify its campaign for forcible economic war on Jewry tomorrow and today failed to halt the drive against Jewish business.

A new proclamation defined the action as the beginning of a war on the entire Jewish race of the world. A letter declaration that it will be fought "until victory is ours and either Hitler's God, the Lord, would be, but the Jews, their backs to the wall as for the first time in their fateful on deaf ears, have visualized their Nazi boycott and ultimate isolation from German cities and towns.

Blame Jews

Chancellor Hitler's battle cry that "Jews and the stock exchanges started the world war" was revived today by a government statement issued by the Central Boycott Committee.

"The Jewish world coalition in the back with its same methods it employed to precipitate the criminal world war. Again Judah is at work to exterminate the German people as Hune and Barbarians" said the proclamation.

The Nazis profess to see International Jewish plot at work and the Jewish press always tolerant for the ills that befell Germany as a result of the world war.

The Jews themselves will be obliged to identify their store for the Boycott Campaign by hanging out signs bearing black placards. Other demonstrations and public display of posters in order to prevent the patronizing and slogans for the Boycotters. In carrying out the Boycotts, Saturday, all Jewish employees of Jewish stores and business houses in Berlin will be summarily dismissed at 10 a.m. by order of the Nazi police commissioner. They required to pay Gentile employees for two days' wages and to have started out in defence of their Chancellor

WOODCHUCK SEEN IN TREE

Unusual Position Leads to Capture, Removal to Belleville

This is the tale of "Ji1 Arthur", an Actinolite district woodchuck, who grew tired of the cold, cold earth, Friday morning, and decided to climb a tree. Once in the hole, to get a bird's eye view of the local territory.

In going that, he made two mistakes. Respectable woodchucks had never been known before to climb a tree. And he picked the wrong tree of the lot to do it in.

Then it was that the driver of a morning milk truck, Harold "Hi" Boy Woodcock, of Stirling, came along. He noticed something in the crotch of a tree between Actinolite and Stirling. Investigation by the little rodent after some difficulty, was induced him to fall out of the tree, drove to Belleville and gently presented Mayor Geo. O. Tice with the gift of a fine, healthy woodchuck for the spring season.

All reports of "Ji1 Arthur" chirps contentedly from the interior of a large cage-like box in the City Hall Mayor Tice may be all replace the one he had got woodchuck they had for years.

SCENES IN SCOTLAND SHOWN TO ROTARIANS

Canard Line Representative Takes Members on Trip

Belleville Rotarians were treated to a very interesting display of views describing a delightful trip to Scotland and tours about the highways and byways of the Emerald Isle of heather, with suitable notations by the guy from J. H. Dalley, representative of the Canard Anchor-Donaldson steamship line. Life on shipboard with the interest of morning and afternoon teas, games and shuffleboard contests, perhaps were shown in word and picture, leaving out and arriving by rail with all the interesting thrills which accompany these sometimes strenuous voyages. The pictures of Scotland's hills and valleys, lakes and mountains, historic castles and romantic nooks, pilgrimages to the home of Bobbie Burns and other points of interest, made a very interesting presentation and no doubt inspired a yearning in the breasts of many Rotarians to make the trip at the earliest possible opportunity.

I received word Thursday morning that he was close to the end of the passing on or my old and esteemed friend, John Elliott, at 88, with hundreds of others of my fellow citizens had expectantly hoped against hope that the ebbing tide of his mind and nerve of his death came not yet, but alas, it has come. For 37 years I have known Mr. Elliott and during all that time I was in close business transactions with him. To my knowledge a man was never to sincerely admire him. He had, I believe, done more to build up the Bay of Quinte fruit industry than any other citizen and ever since he had the had plans for furthering this knowledge. In all matters pertaining to the general good or Belleville, the Bay of Quinte district and Ontario and the city's advancement I have ever found John Elliott ready to lend his assistance. I could say much more concerning his character and worth as a man and what he had accomplished in life, but all I know that as well as myself. My own regret and sorrow at his passing I wish to express and that of the members of the City Council, city officials and the citizens of Belleville. To those left, to mourn his loss I tender the sincere sympathy of the council, officials and as mayor of the city, that of the community as a whole. My prayer is that God the sympathy of Mrs. Tice I also wish to publicly extend to those bereaved.

Allen R. Schryver, Chairman of the Belleville Board of Education:—It is impossible to find words to express the sincere regret occasioned by the passing of John Elliott. I have been in contact almost daily with him both in business and otherwise for nearly 35 years. His ever kindly and considerate personality was a thing to be cherished and to those who were privileged to sit with him on the Board of Education of which he was chairman for several years the place will be hard to fill. Words are futile things after all and at this time their use particularly so in noting this great loss to our Board and our community.

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, Vicar of the Church of St. Thomas, Belleville—In the passing of John Elliott, the city and the community surrounding has lost a valued citizen. The church in general in her wider activities, and more particularly the diocese of Ontario and our own parish of St. Thomas has suffered a severe blow in the sudden cessation of the labours of a wise and loyal churchman. Mr. Elliott represented the Church of St. Thomas in the Synod of the Diocese of Ontario for many years and was engaged as one of the most important committees of the Synod.

Personally I feel very deeply the passing of a staunch friend—whose genial character and personality made it a great privilege to even have shared that friendship for a few short years. His many activities in his service for his fellow man are ceased—and they were legion—we can simply say—for his accomplishments in life—Laus Deo—and with his toil over—Requiescat in Pace.

E. R. Fiskin, President Belleville Cheese Board: For many years for years it had been my privilege to enjoy the late John Elliott in a business way and personally, and it must deeply regret the death of my old friends. His work for the cheese industry of our district has been outstanding and the work regarding it knowledgeable and appreciated and in his years of office as treasurer of the Belleville Cheese Board he worked arduously for the upbuilding of our organization.

In this expression of the Belleville Cheese Board, regret on its passing away of one of its members I would express his sympathy to those who have been called to bear this unexpected grief.

F. O. Hecty, Secretary and Manager of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce:—There seemed to be a grim unreality in the news that came yesterday afternoon that one who had for a quarter of a century established a kindly energy in the life and activities of our city had completely passed into rest and silence. John Elliott came to Belleville little known beyond the meagre confines of a country village. He quickly closed yesterday with a friendly acquaintance that extended intimately. Walter H. Reeve of the city, and Miss Norah of the Eastern School of Commerce, Ottawa, and two sisters, Mrs. J. Maxwell and Mrs. A. Walker of Dublin, Ireland.

The sympathy of many friends here, and especially to the daughter, Mrs. Waddle, in her double bereavement, with two days Wednesday morning, her husband passed away in Hamilton.

John Elliott's life on earth is done, his work is accomplished, his scars three score years and ten. He aided in all good works and his life was of his worth to the community of Belleville will long remain a practical example of a friendly, loyal, tolerant, true Christian gentleman. His kind, sunny disposition won him a place in many hearts, and his counsel, ripe and old his sound judgment and unbiased opinions.

His activities included the following positions, which he occupied in Belleville for his city and country. In 1912-13 he was president of the Belleville Board of Trade, and that year was a representative of Belleville in the annual meeting of the Federation of the Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire meeting at Toronto. He was one of the Belleville delegates to the Associated Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce of Canada conventions at Quebec City, Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax. In 1920, he went as a representative of the local Chamber of Commerce on its Good-Will Tour by South America and various islands in the South Atlantic. In 1921, he attended the convention of that body at Winnipeg and made a tour with other representatives of the Hudson Bay and Peace River district, and last summer he attended the convention of the Canadian organization at Kingston and accompanied the delegates on a tour through the Maritimes and to Newfoundland. Mr. Elliott had also visited Great Britain several times in the interest of increased agricultural production and immigration.

Mr. Elliott was president of the Belleville Curling Club in 1914-15 and was treasurer of the Hastings' County Patriotic Fund during the war and for some years afterwards. He was a trustee of the funds of the G.W.V.A. and treasurer of the Belleville Association of that body. During the Victory and War Loan drives Mr. Elliott was a most active member of the advisory committee connected with them here, and gave yeoman service of his time and energy in promoting their success. For a number of years he was treasurer of the Belleville Cheese Board and in many other capacities he had willingly assisted in promoting the city's welfare. He was also interested in the Y.M.C.A. work, and the work of the Children's Aid Society.

Board of Education

Mr. Elliott was elected to the Board of Education in 1908 on the 4th and for 20 years had been one of its most interested, active and hardest working members. He was chairman or the Board for five years, from 1925 to 1929 inclusive, and during his term of office saw the building and completion of the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School, on which he had been in view for years. At the beginning of the present year Mr. Elliott resigned as one of the school trustee, his time in connection on the Agricultural Board of Control and his personal duties at his regular attendance at the Board of Education.

Prominent in Church or England

As a devoted member of St. Thomas' Church, Mr. Elliott had held many offices in the Church of England, both in Belleville and in the councils of the Synod of Ontario. His work for his church called for much time and hard thinking and his advice was sought on many matters, and he performed those connected with finance. His time was at the disposal of his pastor and bishop and since his retirement from the bank, he has devoted much time to this work.

For several terms of office, he was a lay delegate to the Synod of Ontario and for many years was a teacher in and superintendent of its Sunday School. He was a member of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada a member of the Provincial Synod of the Province of Ontario and a member of the executive committee of the Synod of the Province of Ontario. Mr. Elliott was a member of the Council of the Diocese of Ontario and a member of the Council of the Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada. He was also a member of St. Thomas' Church and a member of several committees in connection with the General Synod.

In the passing on of John Elliott his church suffers a loss that will be most severely felt. Like all things his church has grown and advancement, received his most active concern and admiral attention.

Fraternal Connections

Mr. Elliott was a member of the Belleville Club, the Belleville Golf Club, and the Bay of Quinte Country Club. He was also a member of the Canadian Club of Toronto, a member of Quinte Friendship Chapter No 321 R. A. M., the Belleville Lodge No. 81 I.O.O.F., Belleville Encampment No. 194 I.O.O.F. The late John Elliott was a British Conservative and through an Imperialist and a staunch Conservative.

To mourn his loss remain three sons; Reginald, Advisory Officer in the Bank of Canada and four daughters Mrs. Edward with Canadian Drawn Steel Co. Ltd., of which his late father was president, Mrs. Hamilton, a director of Hamilton; Mrs. Wallace

LATE JOHN ELLIOTT

To the city which he had given so many years of his energy and mature experience to develop, to the agricultural districts with which even him a deb which can never be paid for his tireless interest and effort on behalf of the dairy industry, to the church in which he was one of the leading laymen of the diocese of Ontario and of the province, to banking institutions of which he was so able a representative, and to countless individuals the death of John Elliott comes as a loss which will be long and keenly felt.

Coming to this city twenty-seven years ago, Mr. Elliott became at once a factor in the community life and from that time forward, he spared not himself to improve the status of institutions, industries and social life. Those who knew him personally today feel the burden of a personal loss, while, for the welfare of the thousands of children who passed through the schools which he gave so much to develop, and who were not intimately brought into touch with him except through his works, also experience a sense of irreparable separation.

The late John Elliott possessed one of the most orderly minds it is possible for a human to have. The brilliance of mind which gave him health and zest in life, found also channels for the development and exercise of his innate talents. This equanimity enabled him to use the common phrase, the sound mind in a sound body, gave him opportunity to serve in a remarkable degree. No talent which God talents to rust unused, but everything of human interest found him exercising his great intellect and sympathy.

Agriculture was one of the fields to which he bent his attention. His part in the development of this district, through expansion of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce linked up his interest with the dairy industry. Since he first came to Belleville he had taken a keen interest in the Belleville Cheese Board of Trade and never tired of praising the superior quality of the product of the Quinte District at home or abroad. His cheese dinners were classic gatherings, the like of which no other banker in Canada ever held. They were educational, they were social and they advanced legislation. This effort was but typical of his attitude to all phases of business and mercantile life including the institution of banking. His contributions were to every form of industrial and mercantile life. Honor came to him recently in his appointment to the Ontario Agricultural Development Board, a post for which his lifelong interest in the farmers' welfare had prepared him.

But if Mr. Elliott occupied a unique figure in the life of the city and the surrounding counties and in the educational field, it was because the man as ever was greater than his works. Through every effort shone the kindliness and smile of one who loved his fellows. Never was the man submerged and sunken under the executive ability. In his busiest moments he ever was the friend, revealing those qualities which won him instantaneous and abiding friendship.

Death seems such an impossible thing in connection with a man of his vitality and wide activities, and yet men know that he has but rested from his labors. Whatever his hand found to do, he did with all his might and no unfinished task remains. A life well spent and full of good works, a life which was original and escaped the dangers of routine, a life of sympathetic interest in every human has closed. This is his legacy.

IS SHAW SLIPPING?

Perhaps George Bernard Shaw is weary of making others laugh by his witticisms. But at least some of his caustic references made this week in California smack not of wit so much as of bitterness as in his reference to two actresses, one of whom wept after his sally.

Or Shaw may possibly misunderstand the people of the United States, thinking them incapable of understanding anything but the like of the crude and rude jokes about Miss Alice Brady, whose pretty face he notes but also her "hat like that."

Surely Shaw perhaps has not quite lost his oldtime brilliance as a wit is shown by some of his remarks on public affairs but when he becomes personal, he does what every other wit does—he hurts.

"picks on" two actresses, Miss Brady and Miss Anna Harding, neither of whom deserved his savage remarks.

Shaw has been given credit as one of the most brilliant of men but he is, perhaps, striving to live up to a reputation. If he is doing that it is a bubble he is following and if anyone else were to follow a bubble, Shaw would be only too ready to attack him.

Many people think that the playwright has had a disastrous U. S. visit, which will go down in Shavian annals as one of little importance.

Fortunately fine as wit is, all men are not Shaws. A world of sharp tongues is one of the things mankind would avoid. The sharp tongue is a dangerous weapon. With restraint and taste it may do great wonders in the world but if it runs wild, it loses all its gains many times more rapidly than it gains them.

It would be a catastrophe to a man of Shaw's intellectual pride were he to become a bore.

TRUE CONTENT

They who have worn the purple
And dwelt within palace walls,
In sight of the sunken gardens,
In sound of the waterfalls,
Have feasted and danced to music
And laughed as their way they went;
But they have not gained in their revels
The spirit of true content.

While those who are clad in cotton
In the city's crowded streets,
Or close to the clods have labored
Where the great heart of nature beats
Have been paid in the joy of creation,
The coin that is never spent,
And though they go worn and weary,
They taste rapture of true content.

DANGERS OF THE SUN-BATH

The sun-bath craze is overdone, asserts a French physician.

At its best, he says, it was founded upon a misconception. At its worst it causes the weak to become weaker and the well to run serious risks.

Young and old alike should be cautious in taking sun-baths, says Dr. Charles Flessinger, from whose study in Candide (Paris) these points are taken:

"To begin with, one should think of one's age. After 40 years there should be an end of the folly of exposing one's skin to the sun cult.

"Doubtless, a man of sixty does not think he is old . . . .

"If the arteries no longer are endowed with juvenile elasticity, what risks are run of congestions, not to mention various infections!

"Even among the young accidents result from sun exposures. A young girl, taking her sun-bath, was smitten with endocarditis and caught a fever.

"The functions of the skin capillaries are interfered with by the stimulation due to extreme light. Those subject to heart difficulties, and all who are likely to feel the effect of overstrain, run another risk. The work of the heart is made heavier and a tendency to fatty degeneration.

"This great tension is sometimes misunderstood by its victim. He who has passed middle age would do well, before taking a sun-bath, to consult a physician.

"Those whose kidneys are not in the best shape should also be cautious. Skin exhalation is often checked by the drying process of a sun-bath.

"Poisons eliminated through the skin will then seek to excite by other routes. They will go to the kidneys, thus imposing greater labor upon an organ which may be overworked as it is.

"Some tuberculosis subjects have hoped for an improvement in their state by means of sun-baths. They would be wiser if they did not pin their hopes to this expedient. There are too many complications to fear. The same holds good for the asthmatic.

"The nudist craze may entail a series of crises in health that will continue hopelessly.

"Those suffering from skin affections, of various kinds must also be on their guard against the sun. Hundreds of eczemas especially should avoid sun-baths."

It was the night before Sandy Mc-Tosh's wedding. He was talking over-arrangements with his best man.

"I suppose ye'll be givin' us a sendoff?" he inquired.

"That's usually the thing to do," replied the best man.

With rice and confetti and white ribbons?" inquired the husband-to-be.

"Ay!" said the other.

Sandy looked pensive. Presently he said:

"And old shoes thrown after us?"

"Oh, ay of course!" replied the best man, wonderingly.

"Well," said Sandy, "I wear tens an Jessie takes sizes."

Little Stories of Big Results

THE entire earnings of the Mutual Life of Canada are owned by the policyholders.

The following actual result is proof that it pays to own a "participating-in-profits" policy in this company.

POLICY No. 11,512—ISSUED IN 1884—$1,000
20 Payment Life

This Policyholder paid The Mutual Life
20 Annual Premiums of $43.32 ..... $504.06
The Mutual Life has paid him in dividends ... $404.46
The total cost of $1,000 insurance protection for 49 years was only $99.54
(An average of only $2.03 yearly)

IN ADDITION

The value of his policy in cash today is $807.32

It will be seen that for $99.54 he now has a credit of $807.32. The cash value will increase year by year and he will receive a cheque annually for his share of the earnings of the company.

If he had taken a similar policy on a "non-participating-in-profits" plan at the lowest known rate it would have cost him $17.50 yearly, a total of $850.00 for 49 years—as compared with a total of $99.54 under the Mutual Life of Canada "participating-in-profits" plan.

This case, now known as Policy-holder in this successful and sound Canadian Company, is on file below for further information regarding the Mutual Life and its Policies.

Monsignor Farrelly celebrated his forty second anniversary mass in St. Michael's Church on the morning of Easter Sunday. A reporter today spent a pleasant half hour at the Presbytery in conversation with the Monsignor and gleaned some interesting facts in connection with a life which has covered nearly as five years of work in the cause of Christianity. Monsignor Farrelly was born in Ballieboy, Cavan County, Ireland, in 1827 and after receiving the finishing touches to his education in his native town, came to Canada in 1850 and to Kingston. Ont. at the age of eighteen. He finished his education at Regiopolis College, Kingston, and was ordained to the priesthood by the late Bishop Phelan on April 12th, 1851. After his ordination he remained in Kingston two years assisting in the Cathedral services. The following four years and a half were spent in the mission of Hastings, where the first Presbytery was built through his efforts. Later he was transferred to Lindsay where he was instrumental in building a beautiful brick church. Returning to Kingston some eleven years later he was appointed Vicar-General by the late Bishop Horan. After remaining three years in Kingston he came to Belleville nearly two years ago and has since labored here. Since coming here Bishop St. Michael's Church has been built mainly through his efforts at a cost of $50,000 Ten years ago he was created a domestic prelate to his Holiness Pope Leo XIII which entitles him to wear his purple and crimson upon him the dignity of a Bishop without a See. The others also entitles him to "Right Rev." He is not entitled, however, to wear the mitre or use the crozier. The title is purely honorary and is bestowed by the Holy See for meritorious work in the church.

Letters to The Editor

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—

I see in March 24th. issue of your paper that Mr. G. A. Britton in replying to my letter asks why I dragged him in God Temple down to Revelation without explaining Luke 16: 19-31. I see no need to explain all the different places where that is mentioned. I submitted the letter too lengthy so will you kindly permit me space in your paper for a brief explanation of this parable of the rich man and Lazarus. As the is the only scripture that the advocates of eternal torment will take by grace their contention I believe it is worthy of consideration. Those who use it as proof of eternal torment generally interpret it as a literal statement. First, we will look at it from a literal viewpoint and note the absurdity. There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day. Not a word about him receiving a good man or a bad man only he was good clothes and had lots to eat. Then it good clothes and food merit eternal torment there is poor hope for a pair of us. And likewise a certain beggar named Lazarus, who day by day was laid at his gate. Not a word is said about the poor man's morality only that he was a beggar and full of sores. Now, how many people would call that a recommendation for gaining the heavenly prize? Ecclesiates 9: 5, "The living know that they shall die but the dead know not anything." To argue in a literal sense concerning of this Scripture we are forced to admit that it is a parable and that the our Lord is speaking of two national. Illustrating them by the rich man and the Gentile nation pictured by Lazarus. Now at one time all God's favors were going to the Jews. In Amos 3: 2 "You only have I known of all the families of the earth, Yours they fared sumptuously at Jehovah's table. They were a royal nation pictured by Lazarus. Justified by righteous through the typical sacrifices performed every year at the great Atonement day picture by the fine linen. Also in Hebrews 11: 39, speaking of the Gentiles said that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the common wealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise having no hope and without God in the world. The time came when the tables turned, when five days before Christ's crucifixion he rod into Jerusalem on the ass and wept over their city and said: "Your house is left unto you desolate." There the rich man died but his former condition, died at a nation but still lives as a people. Paul said, Acts 17: 46, "It was necessary that the word of God should have first been spoken to you, but seeing yet put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, we we turn to the Gentiles." Three and one-half years after Christ's crucifixion, the gospel was sent to the Gentiles when Cornelius was the first Gentile convert. Acts, the tenth chapter, there the Gentiles died to their former condition and were right into favor pictured by Abraham's bosom. Abraham being used in the Scriptures as a type of God.

All are witnesses to Israel's suffering for they have undergone this last eighteen centuries. The fine linen and for the drop of water has been fulfilled in the Jews making requests to the Gentile nation in Hebrews 2: 12, speaking of the Gentiles in Turkey and Russia.

There is much more that could be said in substantiation of the thought given but space will not permit at this time. Notice in putting a literal interpretation on this scripture the close proximity of the two places, heaven and hell, they were able to see each other and call to one another.

Mr. Britton said in his letter that there was a heaven to gain and a hell to shun. Now, I would like to ask him how it was that Jesus failed to shun it, Acts 2: 27-31. The Scripture designates Him as being consigned to Sheol, hell, separate from sinners.

Thanking you for past favours, Yours respectfully,

Cities Service Win Robertson Trophy 2nd Successive Year Defeating Trenton on Round

Win Game 8-4 And Overcome Trenton's Two Goal Lead.

MUCH THE BETTER

Spectacular Hit And Players on Two Occasions Stage Melees

With their plays skating and using their sticks to the best advantage, the Cities Service won the Robertson Trophy emblematic of the senior district hockey league, for the second year in succession, when they overcame a two goal lead enjoyed by Trenton, winning the game 8-4 and that round 10-6 on the Belleville Arena on Thursday night. Those who were in attendance witnessed one of the most thrilling games of the season, there being plenty of end to end rushes, judging by the scores, and a couple of free-for-alls thrown in for good measure. The Cement boys played the best condition, had the most smooth going and combining and when they went after goals, their plays were good. They were more systematic and their shooting was more accurate through the piece. Trenton began fast with the winners in a perfect spot to block the shot and later trying to throw the rebound out of danger.

Typical Contest

It was a typical Trenton-Belleville clash and plenty of gore was spilled, there hostilities ceased. There was also play against each other during the whole season as many times as these two teams have battled are bound to have personal grudges and they all broke in the one game. It is not the sort of game that a mere paper pasting about the ice in general tells near is it conducive to letting the patrons in at his game. Pans pay their good money to see a hockey game, not to see a free-for-all but on the other hand nerves become frayed in the heat of battle and a boy sometimes will make a break that he would not make in his life other scenes. The season is over and the boys, like good sports, shake hands and would it is here and all was forgotten. Bang St. Louis and Lac Vico played the first combat in the second frame, while Bryant and Norm Johnson waited till near the end of the pastime to provide the fireworks. No one was seriously injured and the referees in charge handled a delicate situation well. A number of penalties were occurred when a lady spectator was accidentally hit by a puck in line with the puck when it was being sent along the avenue, which the referee carried her to the manager's office, where she received attention. Fortunately the eye was not injured but the young lady will have a badly discolored optic.

Penalty at Goal

The first half was a lot of goals and they certainly had their money's worth last night. The game was inaugurated until the last minute of play at Trenton, when Bob Bell netted the hopelessly beaten to stage a rally that did not carried the game over. Of their short experience as wrys stands a hockey player in goal and stood up well with the rubber. When the going got too tough the rubber was shot down to the far end and on the return play the Cities boys picked out their wing and left the rest to the defense. The work of both defenses stood out. In the second quarter and none was given, while there were a few in every occasion, but on the whole both defenses made the game both and rough and many a player was jarred by his body contact. Both goalies and backchecking of both teams was terrific and the game was dangerous at times, so much, in fact, it could not be maintained. Picking a team in finding one's best, it would be unfair to single out any special player for signal honors Covert, Nicoll, Morgan and Weir stood well on the line, while Sherry and Rigby played a sound defensive game in front of Lac Vico, who although he did not have as much to do as Chambers at the other end acquitted himself nobly. Jimmy McGuire went well in spots, but Woodhall played one of his best games and that is saying something. Bell, Trenton's star, was off his player but he is generally around and he had to be, for he was one of the game and working overtime.

Ken Teigh Starred

Ken Teigh and George Pilon were standouts for the losers with Powers a close second. This boy Powers, who converts on the right rail is a good player when both wings file in fashion, can handle his stick and knows how to shoot. His stonepusting type and his two goals were well earned. York was the life of the rearguard, for he was doing sensational at times but he had to retire before the close of the game from utter exhaustion. Bowen stopped all and sundry but he was beaten too often and when arse to be effective, Mr. St. Denis went around with a chip on his shoulder and several times had it smartly knocked off. The playing in the early part of the game was nearly perfect, the passes, for the most part, were flawless. Bolam had too many aces to intend to be effective, while Norm Johnson displayed good sticksmanship at times and backchecked like a fiend every time he was thrown over the boards.

Covert had the first real chance, when he faked a play and went through only to have the disc roll off his stick. Nicoll drew a net and Trenton, taking advantage of the high sticking, drew up on a face round when Powers took a perfect pass from St. Denis and swept in close to catch the corner of the twine. The Cities Service went on the attack sag for minutes they kept play the rubber in Trenton territory but could not score until Covert picked up a rebound off McDonald's shot and neatly beat Chambers. Rigby made a nice play and Teigh and Pilon nearly crashed the golden gate. Chambers was his own by the eye, when Sherry shot from close in and as there was only seconds to play the period was called. The goalie came back in the second to continue his good work.

Bolam Penalized

Bolam was penalized for playing with a broken stick and shortly after the spectator was hit. Finally Jimmy McGuire put his team back in the running for the silverware when he rifled home a passout from Nicoll. Ken Teigh then went wild and slashing through the opposition netted the rubber on a nice effort. Norm Johnson, not to be outdone, perfectly picked his through the Powers' defence. "Pep" Kelly supplied the equalizer as he gathered up a loose puck and flipped it past Romeo Seguin.

Never were the chances to meet the Western challengers in the final, Regina Pats or Canadian Native Sons were dead a hand blow with the injuries to Bowen Peterson and Cec Preston. Peterson, left winger on the second string, suffered a torn cartilage while Preston, who alternates on the defence, was provided out with a dislocated shoulder.

The lone goal in the first period came at the 12 mark as Powers with Bezzer Munday, Royals' defenceman, "Pep" Kelly, body checking laid low both Peterson and Preston, doing the honors handy took a pass out shot on his left and, in attempting to pass flipped it between Seguin's skates in the net.

Play was even in the second period with both teams making hard scrabble but neither could register a shot to pass.

Then came Foreman Donnelly's two tallies, that brought the Royals into good advantage. The first was on three minutes after the start of the last period, Munday and Martin combining with him. Although the latter went in from Shea, Donnelly was not to be outdone. He poke checked the puck from the Regina defence and sailed home the rubber to feint Forder out of position and succeeded in a hard cross cage shot. Pep Kelly sent the Newmenter sailing to the mid-ice for an interception in the final tally in the last minutes of play.

"Pep" Kelly Evens Game With Only 58 Seconds to Play

Montreal, March 31—(CP)—Newcastle's Redmen and Montreal Royals were still on even terms today in the fight for Eastern Canada Senior Hockey supremacy. They played at 3-3 the here last night in the first game of the two game series.

A crowd of 11,000 hanged over to witness a Memorial Cup semi-final in Montreal, which had cheered Peterborough as the Royals came from behind to establish a lead, losing it on a bloody face and flipped it past Romeo Seguin.

Never were the chances to meet the Western challengers in the final, Regina Pats or Canadian Native Sons were dead a hand blow with the injuries to Bowen Peterson and Cec Preston. Congratulations are due "Bob" Rodner on his re-election to the office of president of the Hastings County Junior Hockey league. The league is progressing by leaps and bounds as today they boast of a five team set each for Peterborough and Junior Moose, Wellington, B.A. A.A. were strengthened by two new clubs from Belleville—the Crystaleers, and Frankford, the schedule for the Point Anne juniors last fall and that newly formed Quinte End A. C. the night's meeting was one of the snappiest we ever attended. Each delegate seemed to know what he wanted and everything went through in a hurry.

Congratulations Cities Service.

You are an up and fighting team and you thoroughly deserved the laurels that you today enjoy.

It took the local "Offmen" exactly 58 minutes to overcome the Trenton two goal lead and then go on and defeat the visitors by the score of 8 to 4 and the round by 10 to 6 while unquestionably the best team won.

Worthy holders of the Robertson trophy is the Cities Service team, champions of the Belleville intermediate O.H.A. title the "green and white" annexed two league titles this season. After winning the Kingston pre-season loop they brushed aside all comers to defend the Criterion trophy, which they won in 1931 in the intermediate league. In passing we might say that last night's game was the fastest and most exciting seen in Belleville this year.

It is really too bad that two teams such as Belleville and Trenton cannot meet in a friendly game without scrapping and fighting all of the time. The two fierce-type games last night's tilts were quite unnecessary.

Boston Bruins Perched in Driver's Seat by Brilliant Overtime Win Over Leafs

Dynamic Eddie Shore Gives Pass For One And Scores Alone

NERVE WRACKING

Joe Primeau Risks Life by Insisting on Playing

Toronto, March 31 (CP)—Threat of an all-United States final for the Stanley Cup increased today as Boston Bruins perched in the driver's seat with a two-game-to-one margin over Toronto Maple Leafs in their five-game National Hockey League championship series and cup semi-final.

Boston took the lead with a 3-1 win last night in the thing straight overtime struggle for supremacy when blonde Eddie Shore, hitherto held pointless in the series, blasted the way for the first goal and scored the game-winning marker himself after 4.34 minutes of overtime.

As Shore was doubling his team to victory at Toronto another huge defense man, who earns all-star ranking with the Leafs' cyclone Ching Johnson, started his New York Rangers on a 3-0 triumph over Detroit Red Wings in the first of their two-game semi-final here in New York. Johnson scored the first goal near the end of the first 20 minutes of play.

Nerve-wracking as all close checking, low-scoring games, a crowd of more than 13,000 watched, first in Toronto as Boston went into the lead at Toronto, then broke out in an exhilarating riot of clubbing as Ken Doraly, on for the first time in the last minutes of the third period tied the score.

Both goals scored again in the first minutes of overtime when only the brilliance of Tiny Thompson saved the game as Harvey Jackson got in action with the flashy goals. He crashed to save and below as Shore shot home the winning goal after Viv Ridley and Joe Lamb had exchanged passes that left the defense man in position for the fly-ishing blows.

Second Line on

The same second line was on when Shore made the play for the first goal after almost 20 minutes of scoreless hockey. His rush pulled the Toronto defense away to the side then he slipped the puck to Nels Stewart at the goalmouth for the score.

King Clancy and Hal Cotton were helpmates to Doraty for the tying goal in the third period. Massed inside Boston's defense zone, Clancy took Shore out of the play while Cotton flipped the puck across to the midget right-winger in front of Thompson and a mass scrap ensued the trick.

Toronto's defense wobbled at New York and only the great work of Lorne Chabot, Leaf goalie, Rangers from a healthy lead to take to Detroit for the second game Sunday. The Ken Doraty-Hal Cotton partnership to reach new heights against his last year's teammates to hold them to two goals.

Leading pointmaker of the playoffs, Cecil Dillon blasted in the rebound for Murray Murdoch's shot in the second period after Johnson had delighted more than 17,000 of the New York admirers with his first period goal. Ebbie Goodfellow and Ken Brennan enlivened the game with a fist fight that earned them major penalties.

CURRENT SPORT

Knocks and Boosts

After slumbering quietly all winter the baseball pot de Kingston boiled over and bedlam broke with in the baseball camp. It has been no secret in the Limestone City that leaders were for the Frontenac City's up-and-up, between the loan executives and the players, since last fall. In the situation now stands the present officials have a franchise in the O.S.L., with the majority of seats' caliber available while the players have baseball players and have a smart senior ball club with no franchise in sight.

When the players decided to resign and form an organization it is plain to be seen, that they made no mistake, when they elected their officers. The new club's executive was the result of a meeting of the old veteran members of summer sport in Kingston as Jean Shea, Kennedy Howard, Nobbs Stacey and others who were connected with the old Frontenac club sailed under the sage. On the other hand the present members of senior baseball in Kingston took the game in hand, when it was on the rocks financially and ready to drop into oblivion and on-built a club which, after a couple of years of hard fighting, developed into a pennant winning organization. The players in the Limestone City will be watched with interest this year in the O.S.L. district. Incidentally news of a rather interesting nature relative to baseball in Belleville, will be forthcoming within short notice, when Secretary Jack Ryan of President Charlie Meagher today.

Confident that they will annex the provincial intermediate basketball honors the R.C.I. senior girls entrained for Toronto this morning where they meet the fast Delta C.I. girls of Hamilton in the provincial semi-finals this evening and if successful battle the winner of the East York C.I.—Weston-Normal tilt in the provincial finals on Saturday afternoon. If the games be a draw the medal play-downs are to be played at Jarvis C.I. in Toronto. Miss Soule, coach the local girls' squad has got her charges through a final hard workout. Thursday afternoon in preparation for the big round. The girls are accompanied Miss Soule were Ann Gartley, captain; Esther Mansell; Annie Crabtree; Eugenia Marion Hall; Dorothy Sally Stillman; Mary Merrick; Mary Wallbridge and Hilda Carman, who captained the R.C.I. girl's junior team of eleven this season.

Last night saw authentic harbingers of spring in our midst. The Belleville Golf Club held their annual meeting while the senior baseball leagues also convened.

With a week's rest under their belt Wednesday night Belleville will tie against the Madoc "yellow jackets" for the championship of green and the Belleville and District Golf League and the possession of the Barrows Trophy. Last night's meeting the locals are somewhat speedier afoot, they are a trifle heavier and weightier than their rivals from the north. The "Yellow Jackets" play a rugged style of hard hitting defensive hockey and it will be interesting to watch the speedy locals endeavoring to evade the hard hitting Madoc line. Belleville has a slight edge on Madoc on Saturday, the Madoc team playing its first game of the season. (May we say we expect an air earlier date next fall.)

Congratulations are due "Bob" Rodner on his re-election to the office of president of the Hastings County Junior Hockey league. GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

HOSTS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Please let me know what is correct in the following situation:

Among the guests invited to dinner are Mr. and Mrs. O. Gardiner, Mr. Doe, Because of a vacancy at two, Mr. Doe was asked to be present. Please, but for the card play at night (chicken, not) for the dinner. The Does, of course, were to come to the dinner and then to the card party. Now, the question arises, the couples later exclusively for the dinner?

The Does agreed to invite their friends and did so. However, as the time drew near for the dinner party were to arrive, Mr. Doe telephoned and said that they could not come for the dinner. They might come for the bridge at eight o'clock, he said, but even that was uncertain.

At eight o'clock the guests for the bridge and the other men to be present to the hostess that it was NOT proper to invite a couple for the card-play without asking them for the dinner.

That, in other words, was the reason they did not appear at the dinner.

R. D.

The hosts of this dinner, followed by bridge, were thoroughly within their social rights and quite correct to invite Mrs. Gardiner for dinner and others for the bridge afterward. Those people who are accustomed to going to parties nowadays take this sort of thing for granted, and never should they quibble about the difference between their invitations and the invitation suggestion? It is better, however to say, "this is his bar." Instead say, "raises his hat", or "takes off his hat."

NOTE OF THANKS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A teacher has donated a gift to our church and I would like to send her a letter of thanks.

Could you inform me as to how to write it.

K.

Perhaps your note might read something like this:

Dear Miss Worthington.

Your thoughtful and generous gift to our church was deeply appreciated, and I want to have you know how much we all appreciate your thanks for your goodness. Blessings on you for your gift to the Priest and to us, and for expressing your friendship in such a generous way.

I hope to see very soon, to express our thanks to you personally.

Friendliest of wishes to you.

Cordially yours,
Martha Wells Brown
(Mrs. Reuben Brown)

ACKNOWLEDGING CONDOLENCES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If the mother is dead and the father dies, do the children who are grown acknowledge the flowers of his (the father's) sisters and brothers, whom they have seen only a few times? If so, do they send cards?

D.

Yes, the grown children write the notes of thanks and acknowledge all letters or condolence and to acknowledge the messages of sympathy sent by flowers. It is far better to write notes of acknowledgment rather than to send formal cards of acknowledgment. Formal cards of acknowledgment are proper only for people in public life, people who receive so many condolence messages that it obviously is impossible for them to write notes. Especially would it be inconsistent to send formal cards of acknowledgment to close relatives, even if you do not know them very well, or even if you do not know them at all.

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on this subject submitted by readers.)

Stimulating The Child's Imagination

Take Time to Evolve Games That Call For Thinking

(By Constance Cameron)

"If I only had more time," sighing the mother, "I could do a great deal for my children." That was one mother's plaint.

The other, a slight little person who does all of her own work, makes her husband's shirts and her own linen clothes, irons, bakes and polishes, told me with a smile: "I've discovered inadvertently the most interesting way to stimulate the imagination. And, you know," she added, "I'm a rather philosophical child, alcohol and plodding. I'm delighted at our new game."

The mother of two children had tried to snatch time to read to Ted at bed time. Sometimes each day, but a certain day work had piled up until she felt she had to keep on working in order to finish. So she said, "Ted's going to tell a story to-night, or has to do some sawing. Bring one or more new books to the bathroom with me and we'll play a new game."

When Ted had brought the new book, propping himself against his mother, she said: "Now choose a story with many pictures and you tell me the story from these pictures. Then, if I get the knight in armor, I'll go to you from the book and see how closely you guessed the real story."

The Story Game

The first few years teach a swift, inspiring flight of imagination. It was a hodge-podge of many stories Ted had heard, but he liked the game, and now, when mother is busy, the child concocts stories, not only from his own story books but from magazines. This led to another interesting recification of the game. One day mother suggested: "Let's cut out pictures from an old magazine and paste them on a big sheet of paper and then we could make up a story from them.

Later, Ted decided to draw his own pictures and tell mother the story from these. All is as it has transformed. Ted from a rather slow, limited thinking child into one who sees vivid stories all about him. And it is an excellent play-project for any type of child. And it all began with a mother who didn't have time to play games and a way to help her young son.

TWO FEATURES MAKE SMART PROGRAM NEXT AT CAPITOL THEATRE

An exceptionally meritorious and novelly double bill opens at the Capitol on Monday for three days.

The name Sennett and screen comedy are synonymous and have been ever since the days of the old Biography company back in 1913. A solid twenty years in which to perfect making that has delighted millions.

While Mack Sennett has always retained his energies and talents mostly on the shorter films, on rare occasions he has produced feature length pictures and the coming occasion has been an outstanding event in motion picture history.

And now comes Mack Sennett's latest and the greatest achievement, the super-feature comedy "Hypnotized" which is the big picture at the Capitol on Saturday.

Moran and Mack, the famous "Two Black Crows" of stage, radio and film fame, head the list with Norman Terrace, Charlie Murray, Wallace Ford, Marie Mathews, Jackie Beebe, Alexander Carr, Herman Bing (Sherri), Matt Moore, Hugh and "Jackie", the lion with the three brains. And the supporting cast, which also includes the entire personnel of a circus lion and a three ring circus.

It would be a hopeless task to attempt to describe in detail the plot of "Hypnotized." Suffice it to state that it deals with a hypnotist, who puts an elephant trainer and his colored help into a trance and attempts to kidnap them on the eve of the trainer's wedding. It's a mad, merry concoction of mirth and laughter by the wholesale the kind of a picture only Sennett can make and which Mack Sennett makes it.

"Trailing The Killer"

One of the season's outstanding cinema novelties has been secured by the Capitol Theatre when "Trailing The Killer" in which the leading roles are played by animals, both domestic and wild, and all staged in the North American Continent will be presented on the same bill.

"Caesar" a magnificent police dog will make his American screen debut as the hero and star of the story, the heroine is a she-wolf and the fierce villain and killer is a giant puma or mountain lion. Comedy characters consist of puppies, dogs, goats and wild cats. A similar shadow and "heavy" is an enormous rattlesnake.

"Trailing The Killer" is not merely another "wild animal" picture but a well-knit dramatic story containing every element of drama, heart interest, romance and comedy which abounds in the life of the great American wilds.

Briefly, the story revolves around the dog of a trapper. The dog is through circumstantial evidence, accused of being a killer and of ravaging the sheep-herders' flocks. The dog's master being found dead the animal is outlawed and hunted like a wild beast. Taking refuge in the woods, the dog mates with a she-wolf and raises a family. The real killer is a startling, stealthy puma. Attempting to kill one of the dog's pups brings about a deadly conflict between the dog and the puma which ends in terrific fight and the puma's death.

Interwoven in the unrolling of the story are wonderful nature studies, terrific fight between hereditary enemies and the depiction of a dog's undying love for his master.

Francis McDonald, noted photoplayer will be seen as the trapper, one of five human roles in the cast.

The serial will be shown Saturday only. Complete shows at 2.45; 7.00 and 8.50.

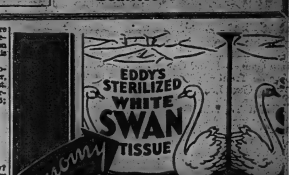
MENTAL COMFORT.

Do you become panicky easily? Instead of mental control, are you roused quickly to the extent that your brain is of little service to you? Thousands in the past two years have had this experience when they ought to have had a mind on a clear thinking track.

The thinking men and women who fared better than those who didn't.

"Doing all to pieces" when confronting with an emergency is now to make it worse for you personally, and perhaps for others.

Unnecessary anxiety on your part is likely to be communicated to others, making the situation doubly serious.



Loose tongues, lack of common sense, are detrimental to business, to industry, to mankind in general.

Unfortunately it is those who have the least at stake who talk the loudest and are most active in creating alarms and dissension.

It is regrettable that so many are guided by what such individuals may say or do.

It is not the loudest talker and the most blatant critic who is the most deserving of consideration and attention.

Chemists are remembering that to industry, to mankind in general, the two hundredth anniversary of Joseph Priestley discoverer of oxygen...

Whether water is hard may be tested by adding a little soap solution to a sample of the water in a small bottle and shaking it; if all the bubbles quickly coalesce into one froths, the water is hard, but if it lathers well it is soft.

MIKE SHEA KILLED

Shea one of the best known baseball players in Canada, was a son of the late Mike Shea, Toronto baseball magnate, and a brother of Jack Shea, Toronto sports editor of paperman, formerly sports editor of the Toronto Star Times.

Jack J. O'Brien, owner of the Toronto baseball club, and manager, Hammond said, His home was in Morris, Minn.

Lieut. Shea, pilot of the plane, resided at Windom, Minn., and is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth Shea, and two children, Mary Jane, 6, and Hendricks, Minn.

Lieut. Shea's home town baseball club, Windom, Minn., is a member of the Minnesota State League, of which the Toronto club is a member. Mrs. Shea and the children left yesterday for Winnipeg, suffered only minor injuries. Lieut. Shea was killed when the large passenger machine fell 150 feet.

Players Badly Hurt

But Al. Shea, catcher, Benjamin Ian Woolley, Coach George Wilson, Pitcher Lefty Stewart and Pitcher Ben Cantwell were seriously hurt. Silverthorne's arms and legs were broken.

Allan Gilbert, secretary of the composing room of the Winnipeg Free Press, who was also one of the officers, was conscious after the accident, although badly injured. Gilbert's passport is widely known in Canadian journalistic circles.

Weather conditions were clear today, unlike those when the Rockies claimed their dead in earth in a severe storm.

The nose or the plane was buried in the earth and the fuselage and wings were crushed, making a tangled mass of debris.

Those who rushed to the scene reported the wreckage did not catch fire.

Fatal Transcontinent-Airport Wreckage

Confusion reigned around the fatal transcontinent-airport wreckage scene. Reports of the disaster soon spread and hundreds of persons, including a wild rush for the oil company's gasoline.

Roads in the vicinity were muddy from recent rains and motor cars were stalled in the mud on the main highways, while Cuban American Pretwest pushed their automobiles around some soiling. Wet slicks formed for a time, then eased under profit taking.

R. L. REDNER HEADS JUNIOR BALL LEAGUE

Five Teams Make Entrance at Annual Meeting of Loop

DOUBLE SCHEDULE

Financial Statement Show Loop in Healthy Condition

Robt. L. Redner of this city was unanimously elected president of the Junior Baseball Leagues of Quinte District at the meeting held in the Y.M.C.A. last evening, when five teams entered the league for 1933 and elected officers for the year.

Teams entered this year are Wellington, Junior Bloom, South East A.C., Crystal and the Quinte Baseball Club. Following the election of officers the league drew up a schedule of play for O.B.A.A. competition and their entrance fee was paid. Financial statement was given forth-with.

Secretary Gordon Delaney read the minutes and submitted the annual financial statement, which on motion was received and adopted. The league proved a financial success, the receipts and losses of a somewhat small basis balance. The receipts totalled $65.00 and the losses $65.00 per club, while correspondence from Napanee was read stating that they were not ready to foster junior ball for 1933 and would like to defer to face the league barrier in 1934. The league secretary was instructed to write and last season returned to the officers.

General Chair Unspun

One of the chief items of business was the election of chairman by President Redner was the question of the chair. Redner suggested that the league be authorized to appoint a chairman, which was carried unanimously

Second-Hand Wife

KATHLEEN NORRIS

"Certainly," Gabriel shivered politely. "Mr. Carradine," she added, "you'll be glad to know that Mrs. Carradine's very well indeed. She's everything that's charming, and I'm very, very fond of her. And I'm sure you and she will be very happy together. I'm very glad to have met you, Mr. Carradine, and I'm sure we shall meet again. Good-night."

"Good-night," Gabriel echoed, for he said to himself, now that he was standing, but he sank back heavily into his chair again.

"Well, what do you think of her?" Carradine asked, with a note of challenge.

She worked very hard in her own way, Gabriel thought, considering that threatened day. Runyon was a good fellow, and Gabriel liked their "efficiency assemblies." She was a good secretary, too. She sat down, and while she murmured with Carradine, Gabriel looked at her with interest and liking at her unconscious best. Yes, even Carter's presence only a few feet away could not spoil this happiness.

This was happiness, this was love.

About a week after the strange Carradine visit, Gabriel and Carter were alone in the office to smile over it. "Well, it's over!"

"It's going!" Carter smiled up smiling.

"Oh, Curtis put up quite every thing!"

"I can't remember," she said confusedly, looking up. "It's all so—I don't know. I can't remember how it started."

"I'm not sorry that we—found each other!"

"Neither else can I be!" she demanded. "My life—my life is so much richer, everything's richer, Sandra, I don't make it harder?"

"But my darling, we mustn't let it make us unhappy!"

"I don't know," she repeated, as to the thing of value most in my life, Sandra. Nothing can take it away now."

"My life is so strange Everything's Wrong"

"Yes," she said. "It is the best thing in my life, too."

Then cook've just—be happy about it!"

Sandra laughed an unhappy little laugh. She gave a little sigh as she put aside and framed her face in her hands.

"I don't see how we can exactly," Sandra, I'm never going to let you be sorry about it!"

"Oh, Carter," she said, with the first hint of laughter she had ever shown him, "don't talk like a—like a boy. You know and I know, we had no business to begin all this—the—the bitterness, the loneliness—the feeling we have! It might get too strong for us, and then what would we do?"

"It is too strong for me now," he said quietly, after a moment. "Too strong for us, and then what would we do?"

"And it's March now, Sandra." "I know it is."

She fell into thoughtful, glancing away frowning slightly, biting her lip.

"When could we have stopped it, Carter?"

"I don't know dear."

"Have you thought—what's what's going to happen?"

"I can't think ahead."

"No," she said, "and I can't seem to think ahead either."

"But you don't feel sad about it," he pleaded, his heart touched with pity and love for her youth and bewilderment and simplicity.

"No, I suppose not," she found, studying him thoughtfully, both with that

THE thousand cases of grapefruit will be shipped from Florida to stands and England this year.

"Come in, dear," said the old lighthouse keeper to his daughter. "You've been on the gallery long enough. Don't you feel the chill? Come and get warm by the fire, and my news will keep."

Lucy Ann, with a wisp scarcely around her, and supported by a shawl, came in from the gallery and sat down on a stool at her father's feet. She was not afraid, as most girls would be, of the darkness and the storm outside, for she had been born and brought up on the island, and had spent most of her life there. She was not afraid, either, of her father, for he was a kind, gentle man, and she knew that he loved her dearly.

"Now, father, what's the matter?" she said, looking up into his face. "You've been worrying about something."

The old man sighed. Lucy Ann was the only child he had left, and he knew that he could confide in her implicitly. He put his arm around her, and supported her as well as he could, for the ship was rolling heavily, and he was afraid that she might be thrown down.

"You're not afraid, are you?" he questioned, gently. "I'll take care of you, and I'll not leave you."

"I'll be quite all right, father," she replied, cheerfully. "I'm not afraid. The darkness on her cheek and her pallor told a different story.

"Well, I'll tell you," he began, hesitatingly. He was evidently finding it difficult to say what he had to say. "Lucy, my child, I'm afraid I've got myself into a scrape. I've been foolish, and I'm afraid you'll have to suffer for it, too. I've been a fool, Lucy, that's what I've been."

"Why, father, what do you mean?" she asked, in a startled voice. "You're not a fool. You're the best man in the world. What have you done?"

"I'll be plain," he answered, "for I've got to tell you sooner or later. I've been a fool, Lucy, because I've been a knave. I've been a thief. I've stolen money that belongs to others. I've been a thief, and I'm afraid I'll be found out."

"Why, father, how could you?" she asked, in a startled voice. "You're not a thief. You're the best man in the world. What have you done?"

"I've been a thief
